NATURE OF ACTION

3 1. In this lawsuit, Plaintiff Dora Martinez seeks to recover disability 4 benefits from Defendant, The Prudential Insurance Company of America
5 (“Prudential”) because she suffers from debilitating depression, anxiety, panic 6 attacks, right-sided shoulder, foot and knee pain culminating in meniscus surgery 7 and low back pain, and can no longer perform her job duties as a Business 8 Relationship Manager for a large national bank. Prudential issued a group long-9 term disability insurance policy to the bank for the benefit of its employees, 10 including Ms. Martinez. She was enrolled for the disability coverage when she 11 became disabled. But Prudential improperly denied her claim despite an 12 overwhelming record of evidence that her disability prevents her from performing 13 the material duties of her regular occupation. Prudential improperly failed to pay 14 Ms. Martinez the disability benefits due her under the policy in her time of need, 15 and she is also entitled to interest and her attorneys’ fees.

17 2. The group disability policy and this action is governed by the 18 Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (“ERISA”).

THE PARTIES

21
22 3. Plaintiff is an individual who, at all times relevant to this action, was a 23 citizen and resident of the state of California residing in La Mirada, California, in 24 Los Angeles County. At all times relevant to this action, Plaintiff was a participant, 25 as defined by ERISA section 3(7), 29 U.S.C. section 1002(7), in the employee 26 welfare benefit plan established by her former employer JP Morgan Chase Bank, 27 N.A. (“Chase Bank”), which is at issue in this action.
28

1 4. Defendant Prudential is, and at all relevant times was, on information 2 and belief, a New Jersey corporation with its principal place of business located in 3 Newark, New Jersey. Defendant Prudential at all relevant times administered long-4 term disability (“LTD”) benefits provided to Chase Bank employees, including 5 Plaintiff, by issuing group policy/contract number G-50684-DE (“group policy” or 6 “Policy”) to Chase Bank (the group policyholder) for the benefit of its employees.
7 The group policy Prudential issued is and was the funding source of the LTD 8 benefits for Chase Bank’s employee welfare benefit plan. The Chase Bank 9 employee welfare benefit plan, including Prudential’s group policy, the certificate of 10 insurance and all other plan contract documents, are hereafter referred to 11 collectively as “the Plan.” The Plan, including the group policy, promised to pay 12 LTD benefits to Plaintiff should she become disabled. Defendant Prudential has 13 acted as a claims administrator and as an ERISA claims fiduciary of the Plan for 14 LTD benefits and the group policy.

16 5. The true names and capacities, whether individual, corporate, associate 17 or otherwise of the defendants named herein as DOES 1 through 10, inclusive, are 18 unknown to Plaintiff at this time, who therefore sue DOES 1 through 10 by fictitious 19 names and will ask leave of the Court to amend this Complaint to show the true 20 names and capacities of DOES 1 through 10 when the same are ascertained; DOES 21 1 through 10 are sued as principals and/or agents, servants, attorneys, and 22 employees of said principals, and all the acts performed by them were within the 23 course and scope of their authority and employment. Plaintiff is informed and 24 believes and thereupon alleges that each of DOES 1 through 10 is legally 25 responsible in some manner for the events referred to herein, and directly and 26 proximately caused the damages and injuries to Plaintiff as hereinafter alleged.

1 JURISDICTION AND VENUE

3 6. Plaintiff brings this action to recover disability insurance benefits and

4 to enforce and clarify her rights under section 502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA, 29 U.S.C.

5 section 1132(a)(1)(B). This Court has subject matter jurisdiction over Plaintiff's

6 claim pursuant to ERISA section 502(e) and (f), 29 U.S.C. section 1132(e) and (f), 7 and 28 U.S.C. section 1331.

9 7. Venue lies in the Central District of California, Western Division

10 pursuant to ERISA section 502(e)(2), 29 U.S.C. section 1132(e)(2), because

11 Plaintiff resides in this district, some of the breaches alleged occurred in this district 12 and the ERISA-governed plan at issue was administered in part in this district.

13 Venue is also proper pursuant to 28 U.S.C. section 1391(b) because a substantial

14 part of the events or omissions giving rise to Plaintiff's claim occurred within this 15 district. Namely, Defendant denied Plaintiff's claim in La Mirada, County of Los 16 Angeles, California within this district.

18 FACTUAL BACKGROUND

20 8. Ms. Martinez began working for Chase Bank on July 1, 2008 as a 21 Business Relationship Manager. She held that position at the time she became 22 disabled on September 10, 2014. Ms. Martinez's job was akin to a field sales

23 executive responsible to promote the bank's products and services to prospective

24 and existing high-end business clients with $500,000 to $20 million in revenues,

25 primarily in the manufacturing and distributing industries. She had to understand

26 complex business, banking, finance, credit and risk management concepts, as well

27 as intimately understand the bank's products and each business she served, to tailor 28 the bank's financial products to best meet a business' particular needs without

1 placing the bank at unnecessary risk. She also had to “pitch” the bank’s products 2 and services to business owners and persuade them to use Chase Bank.

4 9. Her position was not sedentary but required extensive travel, walking 5 and standing for most of the day while mentally concentrating at a high level to sell 6 Chase Bank’s financial products and services to these businesses, learn about and 7 understand the business, its financial needs and risk to the bank. Ms. Martinez had 8 approximately 190 existing and prospective customers in her portfolio with whom 9 she was required to build strong economic and personal relationships. Because her 10 clientele is mostly manufacturing and distributing companies with large warehouse 11 facilities, she had to walk extensively while touring the warehouses. She usually 12 met with four businesses per day to either try to acquire the account for Chase Bank, 13 if not a current customer, or deepen an existing relationship. This required her to 14 build deep, lasting relationships with customers/clients and key employees.

16 10. Before going on her field sales meetings for the day, Ms. Martinez 17 would first meet with other bank employees in the morning at the Chase Bank 18 branch office in La Mirada or Whittier. During these team meetings, she discussed 19 strategy and learned of potential leads on business clients. Ms. Martinez, after the 20 team meetings, called clients and potential clients to introduce herself and schedule 21 sales meetings.

23 11. The book of business Ms. Martinez serviced was in downtown Los 24 Angeles, other parts of Los Angeles County, Orange County, Riverside County and 25 Ventura County. This required her to drive daily from the Chase La Mirada/26 Whittier branches to these customer locations. She had to sit still in her car 27 sometimes for hours at a time in traffic. Other times, the driving part of the trip was 28 fairly short, but she consistently was on her feet standing and walking for long

1 periods of time while at the clients' warehouses. Her job required working 2 approximately forty to sixty hours per week, being on her feet, walking and 3 standing, around 85% of her workday. Her job was high stress as she was 4 scrutinized daily to meet monthly sales/performance numbers.

 6 12. Ms. Martinez is entitled to LTD benefits because she met, and 7 continues to meet, the Plan's operative definition of "disability" and the other 8 conditions necessary to qualify for LTD benefits during the requisite time-period.¹
 9 The Plan and, specifically, Prudential's group policy states that:

10 You are considered disabled when Prudential determines that:

- 11 • you are unable to perform the material and substantial duties of 12 your regular occupation due to your sickness or injury; and
- 13 • you are under the regular care of a doctor; and
- 14 • you have 20% or more loss in your monthly earnings due to 15 sickness or injury. (Emphasis in original indicating defined 16 terms).²

17 13. The Policy provides that "Prudential will assess your ability to work 18 and the extent to which you are able to work by considering the facts and opinions 19 from: your doctors; and doctors, other medical practitioners or vocational experts of 20 our choice." And, it provides that Prudential "may require you to be examined by 21 doctors, other medical practitioners or vocational experts of our choice . . . as often 22 as it is reasonable to do so."

 25 ¹ The claim file indicates Ms. Martinez's coverage under the Plan and group policy 26 for LTD benefits became effective on July 1, 2009 and that she was covered at the time of her reported disability. Therefore, as Prudential concedes, Ms. Martinez was covered by the policy in September 2014 when she became disabled.

27 ² After 24 months of payments, the policy converts to an "any gainful occupation" 28 standard for disability. That definition is irrelevant to this lawsuit since Ms.
 Martinez became disabled in September 2014 and the policy has a 182-day elimination period before payments should have commenced.

1 14. The Policy includes the following pertinent definitions:

3 Regular occupation means the occupation you are routinely 4 performing when your disability begins. Prudential will look at your 5 occupation as it is normally performed instead of how the work tasks 6 are performed for a specific employer or at a specific location.

7 Material and substantial duties means duties that are normally 8 required for the performance of your regular occupation; and cannot be 9 reasonably omitted or modified.

10 Sickness means any disorder of your body or mind, but not an injury; 11 pregnancy including abortion, miscarriage or childbirth. Disability 12 must begin while you are covered under the plan. (Emphasis in original 13 indicating defined terms).

14 15. Under the terms of the Plan, Plaintiff is entitled to 60% of her monthly 15 pre-disability earnings. Based on her pre-disability earnings, Plaintiff is entitled to 16 approximately $4,548 per month before adjustments from other income reductions, 17 if any. Benefits are payable after the employee has been disabled for 182 days, i.e.
18 the Plan's "Elimination Period," in Ms. Martinez's case, disability commencing 19 September 10, 2014. Thus, benefits should have commenced in March 2015 but 20 were never paid by Prudential.

21 16. On September 10, 2014, Ms. Martinez was forced to stop working at 22 Chase Bank due to mental illness. She was actively at work and eligible for 23 disability benefits under the Plan on her last day of work, September 9, 2014, before 24 her date of disability. But as of September 10, 2014, her mental illness (and later 25 physical injuries) rendered her totally disabled. She has not worked since for Chase 26 Bank or anyone else.

27 17. Ms. Martinez has experienced severe and continuous symptoms of 28 mental illness including depression, anxiety, panic attacks and insomnia since September 2014. These symptoms prevent her from the high-level of mental

1 concentration and acuity needed to perform her material job duties of soliciting 2 clients, maintaining and deepening existing client relationships, and presenting them 3 with complex business, finance and risk management concepts to sell Chase Bank's 4 financial products and services (and from analyzing them and evaluating the risk to 5 the bank and client before making her "sales pitch"). Ms. Martinez is unable to 6 focus sufficiently, follow-through with tasks or maintain a reasonably stable 7 emotional level to consistently relate with clients and deepen relationships with 8 them throughout the day, each of which is required by her occupation.

10 18. Ms. Martinez has also experienced significant pain in her right knee 11 and shoulder since February 2015 and, thereafter, low back pain and pain in her 12 right foot. She had a torn meniscus in her knee since then that culminated in surgery 13 under general anesthesia in April 2016. These physical symptoms have prevented 14 her from performing the long hours of daily walking, standing and driving required 15 by her job (in order to promote the bank to prospective and existing clients).

17 19. To date, Ms. Martinez's problems have not resolved. The medical and 18 other evidence in Prudential's claim file unequivocally establishes Ms. Martinez's 19 continuous disability from performing the duties of her regular occupation within 20 the meaning of the Policy from September 2014 to present, contrary to what 21 Prudential concluded.

23 20. After the onset of her disabling depression and anxiety, Ms. Martinez 24 took a leave of absence from work, then applied for, and received, short-term 25 disability benefits ("STD") from Chase Bank for the maximum duration. The 26 medical records continued to support her claim for disability benefits, as Chase 27 Bank determined by paying her claim.

21. For example, on September 9, 2014, Renuka Patel, M.D., Ms. Martinez's primary care physician board-certified in internal medicine examined her for her complaints of anxiety attacks and "a lot of stress at work." Dr. Patel has treated Ms. Martinez as her primary physician for over twenty-five years, since January 1991 through the present. Ms. Martinez complained of trouble sleeping at night due to the stress and that she had lost fifteen pounds from it. After performing a physical exam that included taking her vitals, other tests and observing Ms. Martinez, Dr. Patel diagnosed her with generalized anxiety disorder. She prescribed a treatment plan of no work, seeing a psychotherapist, and started her on anxiety/panic attack medication, one .5 mg tablet of Xanax daily with a refill.

22. On September 18, 2014, Dr. Patel completed Chase Bank's Short-Term Disability Certification Mental Health Form. She based her opinions in the form on her extensive history with the patient and her most recent visit, September 9, 2014. Dr. Patel concluded Ms. Martinez was unable to work from September 9, 2014 at least through October 1, 2014, at which time she would re-evaluate her. She certified her mental disability, noted that she was still under her care, that she had scheduled her for a follow-up visit for September 30, 2014 and that she would continue to see her monthly given her mental disability. Dr. Patel concluded Ms. Martinez was impaired from performing her work functions and stated "can't function due to stress." Dr. Patel concluded Ms. Martinez had mild to moderate anxiety and symptoms of indecisiveness. She noted that she had formally diagnosed her with anxiety, prescribed psychotherapy/ cognitive behavioral therapy, and put her on one .5 mg tablet of Xanax daily.

23. In September 2014, Ms. Martinez commenced psychotherapy with Bettye J. Isom, M.A., M.F.T., a licensed counselor, who diagnosed her with severe anxiety and depression. She continued therapy with Ms. Isom through January

1 2015, at which time she transitioned her ongoing therapy to Pacific Coast 2 Healthsystems.

4 24. On September 23, 2014, Dr. Patel examined Ms. Martinez because she 5 was having trouble sleeping at night and pressure behind both ears from feeling 6 “overwhelmed.” Ms. Martinez also complained of difficulty focusing and feeling 7 hot all the time. After performing a physical exam that included taking her vitals, 8 other tests and observing Ms. Martinez, Dr. Patel diagnosed her with generalized 9 anxiety disorder, insomnia, otalgia (earache) and post-traumatic stress disorder. Ms.
10 Martinez’s anxiety was so severe that it was physically manifesting itself in the form 11 of otalgia. Dr. Patel concluded that because the “patient has difficulty concentrating 12 and [is] unable to sleep,” she will start her on additional psychiatric medications 13 including an anti-depressant, sedative and anxiety medication. Namely, she newly 14 prescribed one 10 mg tablet of Lexapro at bedtime (an anti-depressant and anxiety 15 medication) with a refill and ½ to one 10 mg tablet of Ambien at bedtime, a sedative 16 because she was stricken with such severe anxiety that she could not even sleep at 17 night.

19 25. On September 30, 2014, Dr. Patel examined Ms. Martinez to assess 20 whether she could return to work. Ms. Martinez complained of the inability to 21 sleep, “feels shaky inside,” headaches, insomnia and the inability to concentrate due 22 to stress. She noted that she was getting counseling from Bettye Isom. After 23 performing a physical exam that included taking her vitals, a psychiatric assessment, 24 other tests and observing that Ms. Martinez was “emotionally labile (crying and 25 unable to function),”³ Dr. Patel diagnosed her with: (1) Major depressive order,

27 ³ Emotionally labile is a medical condition of excessive emotional reactions and 28 frequent mood changes. See http://medical-dictionary.thefreedictionary.com/emotional+lability

1 single episode, unspecified degree; and (2) Post-traumatic stress disorder. Dr. Patel 2 further concluded that her patient should not work for three months and has 3 “psychomotor retardation and emotional” due to stress. She prescribed a treatment 4 plan of “rest for now until mental conc[entration] improves,” continuing with 5 therapy, and a follow-up visit in four weeks. She continued her on the same 6 psychiatric anti-depressant, sedative and anxiety medications, Lexapro, Alprazolam 7 (i.e. Xanax) and Ambien.

9 26. On October 1, 2014, Dr. Patel completed another Chase Bank Short-10 Term Disability Certification Mental Health Form. Dr. Patel reported that she 11 examined Ms. Martinez on September 9, 23⁴ and 30, 2014 for her mental illness.
12 She based her opinions on her extensive history with the patient and her most recent 13 visit, September 30, 2014. Dr. Patel concluded Ms. Martinez’s symptoms had 14 substantially worsened. She concluded she had a depressed, anxious and angry 15 mood, severe anxiety (increased from mild to moderate previously) causing 16 “difficulty focusing & maintaining concentration, forgetful,” and panic attacks 17 three-to-four times per day. Dr. Patel further concluded that Ms. Martinez had the 18 following neuro-vegetative symptoms: anhedonia (loss of capacity to feel pleasure), 19 insomnia/hypersomnia (difficulty falling asleep and staying asleep/excessive 20 daytime sleepiness), decreased energy, indecisiveness and poor concentration. Dr.
21 Patel noted that she had prescribed additional psychiatric medications given Ms.
22 Martinez’s increased, severe symptoms. Namely, she increased her anxiety 23 medication, Alprazolam (i.e. Xanax) to one .5 mg tablet every six hours (previously 24 she was on one .5 mg tablet per day). She also noted that she had prescribed new 25 medications during the patient’s September 23, 2014 visit, Ambien (sedative) and

28 ⁴ Dr. Patel saw Ms. Martinez for this unplanned visit on September 23, 2014 because her anxiety and depression symptoms had significantly increased.

1 Lexapro (an anti-depressant and anxiety medication).

3 27. On October 16, 2014, Dr. Patel completed a Certificate of Medical 4 Care. In it, she again certified that Ms. Martinez was mentally disabled, under her 5 care and could not return to work until at least January 19, 2015.

7 28. On October 22, 2014, Dr. Patel completed another Chase Bank Short-8 Term Disability Certification Mental Health Form based on her prior mental status 9 exams and 25 years' experience treating this patient. She again concluded Ms.
10 Martinez was unable to work from September 9, 2014 at least through May 19, 11 2015. Dr. Patel certified her mental disability for that timeframe. Dr. Patel 12 specifically assessed Ms. Martinez's work abilities and concluded she had the 13 following work impairments: "becomes anxious and fearful and very emotional – 14 cannot function," "patient unable to function on daily tasks due to panic attacks," 15 moderately impaired for capacity to relate to others, get along with peers, manage 16 customer requests, ability to maintain an appropriate work pace, perform sustained 17 attention on tasks until completion, capacity for impulse control, ability to manage 18 ongoing work expectations, and minor work impairments for ability to follow 19 directions, complete complex tasks, capable of working on her own, generalizing 20 knowledge to other tasks within work day. Dr. Patel reiterated her opinion, based 21 on her prior mental status exams, that Ms. Martinez continued to have a depressed, 22 anxious and angry mood, severe anxiety causing difficulty focusing and maintaining 23 concentration, forgetfulness, and panic attacks three-to-four times per day, as well as 24 the following continued neuro-vegetative symptoms: anhedonia, insomnia/25 hypersomnia, decreased energy, indecisiveness and poor concentration. Dr. Patel 26 reported that Ms. Martinez continued to take the same psychiatric anti-depressant, 27 sedative and anxiety medications, Lexapro, Alprazolam (i.e. Xanax) and Ambien.

1 29. On October 30, 2014, Ms. Isom wrote a letter to Chase Bank's 2 Disability Management Services which is part of Prudential's claim file. In the 3 letter Ms. Isom confirmed, "I have been seeing Ms. Martinez for counseling for the 4 past two months" (i.e. for September and October 2014). Ms. Isom concluded that 5 Ms. Martinez has symptoms of depression, severe anxiety, often breaks into tears, 6 has difficulty relaxing and difficulty sleeping at night. But that, despite "working 7 hard to lessen her symptoms" and taking her prescribed medication, Ms. Martinez 8 had been referred to a psychiatrist for further evaluation, implicitly indicating her 9 lack of improvement.

11 30. On November 7, 2014, Dr. Patel examined Ms. Martinez for an 12 "urgent/emergency situation," an unscheduled visit due to her severe depression.
13 Ms. Martinez also complained that she was "unable to relax" due to work stress and 14 that she has to take her anxiety medication, Xanax intermittently or she is unable to 15 sleep despite her Ambien prescription, a sedative for her anxiety induced sleep 16 disorder. After performing a physical exam that included taking her vitals, a 17 psychiatric assessment, other tests and observing that Ms. Martinez was "very sad 18 crying and can't concentrate or relax," Dr. Patel diagnosed her with: (1) Major 19 depressive disorder, single episode, unspecified degree; and (2) General anxiety 20 disorder, among others such as diabetes mellitus. She prescribed a treatment plan of 21 seeing a psychiatrist and to continue her psychiatric medications, Lexapro, Xanax 22 for anxiety/panic attacks and Ambien.

24 31. On November 12, 2014, Dr. Patel examined Ms. Martinez for her 25 complaints of "heart beating rapidly, heavy weight on chest & feeling anxious since 26 Sunday evening." Ms. Martinez also complained of chest pain, that she had been 27 sobbing and could not sleep for three days, and that she was "scared about a heart 28 attack." After performing a physical exam that included tests and observing that

1 Ms. Martinez was “in acute distress,” Dr. Patel again diagnosed her with: (1) Major 2 depressive disorder, single episode, unspecified degree; and (2) Post-traumatic stress 3 disorder. Dr. Patel further concluded that her patient had “worsening anxiety and 4 depression.” She prescribed a treatment plan of “no work,” seeing a psychiatrist 5 “asap,” and rest. She also increased the dosage of Ms. Martinez’s anti-depressant, 6 Lexapro/escitalopram to one 20 mg tablet once per day with a refill (previously at 7 10 mg once per day). In addition, Dr. Patel kept Ms. Martinez on her other 8 psychiatric medications, including Xanax for anxiety and panic attacks and Ambien 9 for her anxiety induced insomnia, in addition to numerous prescriptions for her type 10 2 diabetes mellitus. Dr. Patel’s November 12, 2014 progress notes include a copy of 11 her prior Certificate of Medical Care, and she thus thereby reaffirmed that Ms.
12 Martinez could not return to work, again certifying her mental disability from

15 32. On November 17, 2014, Ms. Martinez had an initial assessment with 16 Parvin Afshar, M.D., a psychiatrist with Pacific Coast Healthsystems. Dr. Afshar 17 diagnosed her with depression and generalized anxiety disorder. She further noted 18 that Ms. Martinez had panic attacks, was unable to focus and had difficulty sleeping.
19 Further, that she was on medical leave. She observed during the exam that Ms.
20 Martinez had a depressed mood, that her affect was tearful and anxious. Her 21 treatment plan included prescribing the same anti-depressant, anxiety and sedative 22 that Ms. Martinez was currently taking, Lexapro, Xanax and Ambien, in addition to 23 adding a new anti-depressant medication, 50 mg of Desyrel. She also referred her to 24 weekly psychotherapy with a licensed therapist.

26 33. On December 1, 2014, Peter Mosbach, PhD, a clinical psychologist 27 retained by Chase Bank performed a peer review in connection with Ms. Martinez’s 28

1 STD claim to Chase.⁵ Dr. Mosbach concluded that Ms. Martinez was disabled 2 from performing her own occupation from a mental health standpoint from 3 September 10, 2014 onwards. Specifically, he reached the following opinions:

 5 The employee was functionally impaired from performing her own 6 sedentary occupation from September 10, 2014 to present [i.e. as of the 7 date he authored his report on December 1, 2014].

9 The employee is a 51year-old woman who has been diagnosed with 10 major depression and anxiety. She is receiving psychiatric medications 11 for depression and anxiety from her primary care physician. She is 12 having frequent anxiety attacks which affect her ability to concentrate.
 13 Her anxiety also interferes with her ability to carry out her usual 14 activities of daily living. She is seen on a weekly basis by a therapist in 15 addition to receiving psychiatric medications. Overall, the employee 16 would have evidence of functional impairment from a mental health 17 perspective from September 10, 2014 onwards that would prevent her 18 from carrying out her sedentary occupation. (Emphasis added).⁶

 20 34. In response to Chase's question what specific impairments, if any, 21 prevented the employee from working, Dr. Mosbach concluded, "The employee was 22 experiencing significant levels of anxiety and had frequent panic attacks. She is also 23 depressed. She would have difficulty maintaining pace at work. She would also

 25 ⁵ Since he was retained by Chase Bank (the employer and entity responsible to pay 26 Ms. Martinez's STD claim), Dr. Mosbach obviously had every incentive to find that 27 Ms. Martinez could work and was not mentally disabled from performing her occupational duties. But Dr. Mosbach concluded she was mentally disabled from working, which is strong evidence that Prudential's claim denial was in error.

28 ⁶ Based thereon, Chase Bank approved Ms. Martinez's claim for STD benefits and paid her for the maximum benefit period.

1 have had difficulty concentrating on work related tasks.” In response to Chase’s 2 question what clinical evidence supports continued impairment from working, Dr.
3 Mosbach concluded, “The employee is continuing to experience significant levels of 4 anxiety. While she has shown some improvement in her symptoms, she continues 5 to have difficulty carrying out her usual activities of daily living.” Dr. Mosbach 6 stated that his opinions are held “to a reasonable degree of clinical accuracy.”

8 35. Dr. Mosbach reached his opinions, in part, based upon reviewing Ms.
9 Martinez’s medical records and his November 25, 2014 conversation with her 10 therapist, Ms. Isom. Ms. Isom advised that it was her opinion after treating Ms.
11 Martinez for months on a weekly basis for psychotherapy that Ms. Martinez could 12 not even perform usual activities of daily living (let alone work activities) due to 13 significant anxiety:

15 She stated that the employee is being seen on a weekly basis for 16 psychotherapy. She is prescribed Lexapro for depression and Ambien 17 for a sleep disorder. She stated that the employee was reporting having 18 panic attacks and memory problems. She appeared to be anxious 19 during her therapy sessions. Ms. Isom felt that the employee would 20 have difficulty carrying out her usual activities of daily living due to 21 her anxiety attacks. She stated that the employee has shown some 22 improvement, but continues to have evidence of significant anxiety.
23 (Emphasis added).

25 36. On December 15, 2014, Dr. Afshar had her monthly session with Ms.
26 Martinez to check her medications. She noted that the patient still complained of 27 poor sleep. Dr. Afshar’s treatment plan included continued weekly psychotherapy 28 and prescribing the same medications, except that she increased the Desyrel to 100 1 mg.

3 37. On December 23, 2014, Dr. Patel completed a STD Update Report for 4 Chase Bank and, once again, certified Ms. Martinez's mental disability from 5 working. She responded "Yes" to Chase's question "Does the employee remain 6 unable to work at this time? Dr. Patel concluded that her patient would be unable 7 to work through May 25, 2015, filling in that date in response to Chase's pre-8 printed question of "Estimated Return to Work Date." She noted that she had been 9 treating Ms. Martinez once per week for her mental illness since September 9, 2014.
10 Based upon her personal exams, she reaffirmed her diagnosis of major depressive 11 order, single episode (296.20) and concluded Ms. Martinez had a Global 12 Assessment of Functioning ("GAF") score of 51, meaning she had moderate 13 symptoms of mental illness and that her ability to function at work is moderately 14 impaired but close to the severely impaired end of the GAF spectrum.⁷

16 38. In the STD Update Report, Dr. Patel opined that her patient has the 17 following current impairments/symptoms that prevent her from working: 18 depression, tearfulness, agitation, difficulty focusing and concentrating, wakes 19 several times during the night, and feels tired. When asked on Chase's pre-printed 20 form whether Ms. Martinez is "capable of accepting responsibility for tasks in 21 workplace," Dr. Patel responded "no." She concluded that Ms. Martinez has the 22 following moderate work impairments, defined by Chase Bank to mean that she 23 could only occasionally perform the functions: remember and adhere to usual

25 ⁷ GAF stands for "Global Assessment of Functioning." The GAF is a scale from 0 to 26 100 where higher scores indicate greater levels of functioning. Optimal mental 27 health and coping capabilities are represented by scores in the 91 – 100 range.
28 Persons with mild psychological problems fall in the 71 – 90 range. Serious problems fall in the 41 – 50 range. The GAF rating is made as a standard part of all psychiatric/psychological diagnoses. A GAF score between 51 and 60 means moderate symptoms of mental illness are present, or that a person's functioning in school, work, or social situations is moderately impaired.

workplace rules, maintain work focus/concentration in spite of usual disruptions, organize and sustain energy to attend work regularly and timely, sustain realistic energy through a regular workday, sustain energy to follow through and complete tasks timely, relate to others without undue irritability, maintain stable relationships in the face of usual stresses, sustain thinking and focus in the face of usual stresses, contain behavior despite frustration or negative feedback, take responsibility for errors and omissions, deal realistically with others errors and demands, make use of/ control responses to supervisory feedback, maintain performance in significant organizational stress/change, set appropriate boundaries on authority and relationships, effectively organize completion of multiple tasks at the same time, delay responses when appropriate. She concluded that Ms. Martinez has the following mild-to-moderate work impairments: ability to maintain appropriate work pace, remain on task until completed. She concluded that Ms. Martinez has the following mild work impairments, defined by Chase Bank to mean that she could usually perform the functions but sometimes was impaired: comprehend and follow instructions, maintain focus/concentration despite usual stresses, able to complete tasks, communicate appropriately socially in appearance, speech and actions, take responsibility for solving routine work problems, take responsibility for effect of behavior and productivity on others, make effective independent decisions, organize and manage projects and/or processes independently, capable of working on her own.

39. On January 6, 2015, Dr. Patel again examined Ms. Martinez. She complained that she is “still emotional and can’t sleep or focus” and advised that she was going to cognitive behavioral therapy. After performing a physical exam that included a psychiatric assessment, other tests and observing that Ms. Martinez was “emotionally labile (when questioned about her stress),” Dr. Patel diagnosed her with general anxiety disorder. She noted that Ms. Martinez was to continue her

1 psychiatric medications, Lexapro, Xanax, Ambien and now also 100 mg of 2 Trazodone (another anti-depressant).

4 40. On January 13, 2015, as noted above, Ms. Martinez transitioned her 5 ongoing psychotherapy to Poonam Nina Banerjee, PhD, a licensed clinical 6 neuropsychologist with Pacific Coast Healthsystems. Dr. Banerjee treated Ms.
7 Martinez for psychotherapy on a regular basis, including on January 13, 20, 8 February 5, 17 and March 10, 2015. In each progress note, Dr. Banerjee recorded 9 that she worked on decreasing Ms. Martinez's depressed mood, and she recorded 10 Ms. Martinez's functional impairments.

12 42 On January 15, 2015, Chase Bank submitted its part of Prudential's 13 LTD claim form, indicating that Ms. Martinez had been medically diagnosed with 14 major depressive affective disorder – recurrent episode and unspecified degree 15 anxiety.

17 43. On January 16, 2015, Dr. Afshar had her monthly session with Ms.
18 Martinez to check her medications. She concluded that the patient was “still 19 anxious.” Dr. Afshar's treatment plan included continued weekly psychotherapy 20 and prescribing the same medications, Lexapro, Desyrel and Xanax.

22 44. On January 27, 2015, Dr. Banerjee completed Chase Bank's Short-23 Term Disability Certification Mental Health Form. She based her opinions in the 24 form on her most recent visits, January 13 and 20, 2015. Dr. Banerjee diagnosed 25 Ms. Martinez with: (1) Generalized anxiety disorder; and (2) Major depression 26 (296.33 – the DSM-IV-Code for severe depression, recurrent episodes). Thus, Dr.
27 Banerjee concluded that Ms. Martinez was severely depressed, not mildly or 28

1 *moderately, but the most extreme on the DSM diagnosis code spectrum.*⁸ Dr.
 2 Banerjee further concluded Ms. Martinez was unable to work at least from the 3 time she commenced treating her through May 1, 2015, at which time she would 4 re-evaluate her. She certified her mental disability, noted that she had scheduled her 5 for a follow-up visit for February 5, 2015 and that she would continue to see her bi-6 weekly given her mental disability. Dr. Banerjee specifically assessed Ms.
 7 Martinez's work abilities and concluded Ms. Martinez was impaired from 8 performing her work functions because of her "depression symptoms such as crying 9 spells and impaired ability to concentrate" and her "symptoms of anxiety such as 10 chest pain and panic attacks." She stated that Ms. Martinez was experiencing two-11 to-three panic attacks weekly and that moderate anxiety also prevented her from 12 performing her job functions. In addition to the above, Dr. Banerjee concluded Ms.
 13 Martinez also had the following work impairments: moderately impaired for ability 14 to maintain an appropriate work pace, perform sustained attention on tasks until 15 completion, and minor work impairments for capacity to relate to others, get along 16 with peers, manage customer requests, ability to follow directions, complete 17 complex tasks, capacity for impulse control, ability to manage ongoing work 18 expectations. Dr. Banerjee reiterated her opinion, based on her prior therapy 19 sessions, that Ms. Martinez continued to have a depressed and anxious mood, a 20 dysphoric affect, avoidant behavior, as well as the following continued neuro-21 vegetative symptoms: irritability, anhedonia, decreased energy, indecisiveness and 22 poor concentration.

 24 45. On February 2, 2015, Dr. Afshar had her monthly follow-up with Ms.
 25 Martinez. Dr. Afshar prescribed continued weekly psychotherapy with Dr. Banerjee 26 and re-filled the same psychiatric medications, Lexapro, Desyrel, Xanax and 27

1 Ambien.

3 46. On February 5, 2015, Dr. Banerjee treated Ms. Martinez in 4 psychotherapy. She concluded that her patient was still having a depressed mood, 5 and that her feelings of hopelessness and helplessness impaired her functional 6 ability.

8 47. On February 13, 2015, while Ms. Martinez was still unable to work 9 from her mental illness, she began having right knee pain (which she reported to 10 Prudential). Dr. Patel examined Ms. Martinez on that date and confirmed the 11 problems in her right knee. She complained to Dr. Patel that she had right knee pain 12 when bending her leg. After performing a physical exam that included taking her 13 vitals, a psychiatric assessment, other tests and observing that Ms. Martinez was 14 “still emotional and has difficulty with her concentration,” Dr. Patel diagnosed her 15 with general anxiety disorder and major depressive disorder. She prescribed a 16 treatment plan of continuing to see her cognitive behavioral therapist and 17 psychiatrist for her depression and anxiety, and to follow-up with her chiropractor 18 for her knee pain. She noted that Ms. Martinez was to continue her psychiatric 19 medications, Lexapro, Trazodone, Xanax and Ambien.

21 48. On February 14, 2015, Ms. Martinez treated with her long-time
23 She had follow-up visits to treat the same conditions on February 17, 2015, 24 February 28, 2015, March 7, 2015, April 4, 2015, June 15, 2015, July 8, 2015, 25 October 2, 2015 and May 18, 2016. She also started treating for low back pain and 26 right foot pain on October 2, 2015. Dr. Thomas’ progress notes and medical records 27 reflect that Ms. Martinez consistently experienced severe pain in her right knee of 28 eight-to-nine on a scale of one-to-ten and loss of strength during her visits with him,

1 in addition to right shoulder and later right foot and low back pain.

3 49. On February 27, 2015, Ms. Martinez submitted her LTD claim forms to 4 Prudential and reported that anxiety and depression prevented her from working.
5 She stated that she could not concentrate or focus due to these conditions which 6 interfered with her ability to do her job. As part of the claim forms, Dr. Patel 7 completed Prudential's Attending Physician Statement ("APS") at its request on the 8 same date. Dr. Patel diagnosed Ms. Martinez in the APS with generalized anxiety 9 disorder (300.02). Dr. Patel noted her treatment plan included "rest and see 10 therapist," in addition to her current medications of Ambien (sedative for sleep), 11 Lexapro/ escitalopram and Trazodone (both antidepressants). She noted that her 12 patient continued to treat with a psychiatrist, Dr. Afshar, and a psychotherapist, 13 Poonam Banerjee, PhD, and that she also had just treated her patient on February 14 13, 2015 and had a future visit scheduled on May 20, 2015.

16 50. Ms. Martinez also applied for Social Security Disability Insurance 17 ("SSDI") benefits from the Social Security Administration ("SSA").

19 51. On March 2, 2015, Dr. Afshar had her monthly follow-up with Ms.
20 Martinez. Dr. Afshar's treatment plan included continued weekly psychotherapy 21 and re-filling the same psychiatric medications, Lexapro, Desyrel, Xanax and 22 Ambien. Dr. Afshar noted that Ms. Martinez's medications were "stable," meaning 23 that she was not experiencing side effects or intolerant to the medications requiring 24 a change of medication. In Dr. Afshar's opinion, Ms. Martinez was not ready to 25 *resume work at that time.*⁹ In fact, Dr. Afshar continued treating Ms. Martinez on a

26
27 ⁹ As explained later, Prudential's peer reviewer misinterpreted Dr. Afshar's "stable" 28 comment. Dr. Afshar clarified in her June 13, 2016 letter what she meant by "stable" in her progress note and, further, that by "stable" she absolutely did not mean that Ms. Martinez was ready to resume work as of March 2, 2015.

1 monthly basis after March 2, 2015 through the present, including on April 13, 2015, 2 May 11, 2015, June 8, 2015, July 20, 2015, August 24, 2015, September 21, 2015, 3 October 19, 2015, November 16, 2015, December 4, 2015, January 11, 2016, 4 February 8, 2016, March 7, 2016, April 4, 2016, May 2, 2016, June 3, 2016 and 5 continuing. Each of the progress notes show that Dr. Afshar renewed Ms.
 6 Martinez's same psychiatric medications, i.e. Lexapro, Desyrel, Xanax and Ambien, 7 and, in some instances, increased her dosages or prescribed new medications 8 because Ms. Martinez was still experiencing severe symptoms.

 10 52. As of Ms. Martinez's last psychotherapy session with Dr. Banerjee on 11 March 10, 2015, Dr. Banerjee concluded that her patient was still having a 12 depressed mood, "work problems," and family dynamics that impaired her 13 functional ability. At that time, her psychotherapy transitioned to another licensed 14 therapist at Pacific Coast Healthsystems, Robert H. Thompson, LCSW.¹⁰

 16 53. On March 24, 2015, Richard Chambers, M.D., Ms. Martinez's 17 attending orthopedic surgeon had an initial consult with her for the significant knee 18 pain she had been experiencing since February 2015. Ms. Martinez complained of 19 "pain when walking." Dr. Chambers performed objective tests and noted "max 20 tenderness" at the medial joint line in her right knee. He scheduled a follow-up visit 21 to review the MRI that had been scheduled by her chiropractor.

 23 54. On March 29, 2015, Ms. Martinez had an MRI on her right knee as 24 referred by her chiropractor, William M. Thomas, DC, because she starting 25 experiencing significant pain in her knee in February 2015. The MRI revealed a 26 "tear of the posterior horn of the medial meniscus," chondromalacia patella

 28 ¹⁰ Ms. Martinez changed to Mr. Thompson in part because Dr. Banerjee was busy and had to cancel several therapy appointments. That contributed to the lapse in therapy sessions during the transition.

1 (cartilage under kneecap deteriorated causing chronic knee pain), a joint effusion 2 (abnormal fluid in joint from inflammation or trauma), as well as fluid collection 3 representing bursitis (inflammation of bursa sac which decreases friction).

5 55. On April 7, 2015, Dr. Chambers had a follow-up exam to review the 6 results of Ms. Martinez's knee MRI. She reported right knee pain with any weight 7 bearing for the last three months (since early 2015) that is not improving. Dr.
8 Chambers reviewed the films, determined they were abnormal and diagnosed her 9 with a medial meniscus tear and chondromalacia patella of the right knee. He 10 performed objective tests and physically examined her knee and again concluded 11 she had maximum tenderness in her knee. He concluded Ms. Martinez "may need 12 arthroscopy in the future" for the meniscus tear and also prescribed home exercises 13 for her chondromalacia patella condition. Dr. Chambers regularly saw Ms. Martinez 14 thereafter, on June 9, 2015, September 8, 2015, February 2, 2016, March 14, 2016 15 and April 14, 2016, which culminated with him performing right knee surgery on 16 April 15, 2016, as well as post-operation visits of April 25, 2016 and May 9, 2016.
17 The progress notes consistently confirm that, in Dr. Chambers' opinion, Ms.
18 Martinez had a torn medial meniscus and chondromalacia of the patella in her right 19 knee likely from January/February 2015 until her surgery causing significant pain/20 "max tenderness," worse with prolonged standing and walking, which would require 21 surgery and eventually did, which opinion he based upon objective MRI images, 22 numerous physical exams and other objective palpation tests.

24 56. On April 10, 2015, Prudential denied Ms. Martinez's claim for LTD 25 benefits. It reasoned "no benefits are payable" because "the information in your file 26 does not support impairment that would prevent you from performing [the] material 27 and substantial duties of your regular occupation" as of March 3, 2015. Prudential 28 used its employee psychiatrist, Kevin Hayes, M.D. to review Ms. Martinez's

1 medical records and reasoned: “Based on the medical review [by Dr. Hayes] of the 2 records in your file, we find that you were stable psychiatrically by March 3, 2015 3 and able to resume work activities.”¹¹

5 57. Prudential and its “paper peer reviewer,” Dr. Hayes relied upon two 6 main pieces of evidence in denying the claim. First, Dr. Hayes referenced a 7 comment in the treating psychiatrist, Dr. Afshar’s March 2, 2015 illegible progress 8 note that said “stable” and concluded based thereon that Ms. Martinez could resume 9 working as of that date. Second, Prudential claims that Dr. Hayes spoke with Ms.
10 Martinez’s primary care physician, Dr. Patel, and that Dr. Patel agreed in that 11 conversation that Ms. Martinez was stable and could resume work as of March 2, 12 2015. Neither are true. Based upon reviewing Ms. Martinez’s medical records and 13 these two false assumptions, Dr. Hayes concluded, “Impairment supported from last 14 day worked [9/10/14] through 3/2/15 . . . By this date, symptom resolution is noted.”
15 Thus, Prudential’s own psychiatrist consultant agreed that Ms. Martinez was 16 disabled from working from September 10, 2014 through March 2, 2015.

18 58. In its denial letter, Prudential quoted the Policy’s 182-day Elimination 19 Period, i.e. that Ms. Martinez is not entitled to disability benefits unless she is 20 “continuously disabled throughout your Elimination Period,” which ran from 21 September 10, 2014 through March 11, 2015 in Ms. Martinez’s case. The implicit 22 reason of Prudential’s denial is thus that, while Ms. Martinez was disabled from 23 September 10, 2014 through March 2, 2015, she was not disabled for long enough 24 because she purportedly did not satisfy the Elimination Period and, therefore, is not 25 entitled to disability benefits.

26
27 59. Prudential, in its cursory denial letter, did not express any other reasons 28

¹¹ Dr. Hayes did not perform an in-person exam or speak with Ms. Martinez.

1 for denying the claim. It did not identify or even discuss Ms. Martinez's 2 occupational duties, nor did it discuss her voluminous medical records (summarized 3 hereinabove) other than a sentence or two. It did not mention or distinguish Chase 4 Bank's decision to award Ms. Martinez STD benefits (based on its finding that she 5 was disabled due to depression and anxiety). Prudential's cursory denial letter is 6 obviously deficient and incorrect for the reasons explained later.

8 60. On May 11, 2015, Dr. Afshar continued to treat Ms. Martinez in a 9 psychiatric session and increased her Desyrel dosage to 150 mg, as reflected in her 10 progress notes. She also refilled all her existing anti-depressant and anxiety 11 medications. She recorded that the patient "still has poor sleep." Obviously, Ms.
12 Martinez was not "stable" in the sense that Dr. Hayes interpreted Dr. Afshar's 13 March 2, 2015 progress notes as she continued to treat her for disabling depression 14 and anxiety (and still does to this present day).

16 61. On May 26, 2015, Dr. Patel examined Ms. Martinez for a review of her 17 psychiatric medications, among other things. She complained that she is "still 18 anxious, unable to concentrate," and very emotional. She advised Dr. Patel that she 19 is still seeing her psychiatrist, Dr. Afshar and her psychologist. Ms. Martinez 20 further advised Dr. Patel that she saw an orthopedic surgeon for her right knee pain, 21 Dr. Chambers and that he diagnosed her with a torn meniscus following an MRI.
22 Ms. Martinez stated that she used to be able to walk two miles but cannot walk for 23 prolonged periods anymore because of her knee pain. After performing a physical 24 exam that included taking her vitals, a psychiatric assessment, other tests and 25 observing that Ms. Martinez was "emotionally labile (starts crying)" and wearing a 26 right knee brace, Dr. Patel re-diagnosed her with general anxiety disorder, among 27 other things, just as she had done during her initial September 2014 visit and each 28 and every visit thereafter. Dr. Patel's treatment plan included "continue present

1 medications, continue cognitive behav[ioral] therapy” and agreeing that she should 2 continue seeing Dr. Chambers for her orthopedic problems such as her right knee.
3 Dr. Patel noted that Ms. Martinez was to continue her active psychiatric medications 4 for depression and anxiety, escitalopram/Lexapro, Alprazolam/Xanax and 5 Trazodone/Desyrel.¹²

7 62. On June 8, 2015, Dr. Afshar treated Ms. Martinez in a psychiatric 8 session and increased her Xanax dosage, as reflected in her progress notes. She also 9 refilled all of her existing anti-depressant and anxiety medications, i.e. her Lexapro 10 and Desyrel. Dr. Afshar concluded that Ms. Martinez is “still anxious, restless, 11 depressed.”

13 63. On June 9, 2015, Dr. Chambers recorded in his progress notes that Ms.
14 Martinez’s knee pain “is worse with prolonged standing, walking and with stairs.”

16 64. On July 5, 2015, Ms. Martinez had an MRI on her right shoulder as 17 referred by her chiropractor, Dr. Thomas, because she had continued to experience 18 significant pain in her shoulder since February 2015. The MRI revealed “moderate 19 narrowing of subacromial space.”

21 65. On August 24, 2015, Dr. Afshar treated Ms. Martinez in a psychiatric 22 session and increased her anti-depressant Desyrel dosage, as reflected in her 23 progress notes. She also refilled all of her other existing anti-depressant and anxiety 24 medications. Dr. Afshar concluded that Ms. Martinez is still having “poor sleep.”

26 66. On August 28, 2015, Dr. Patel examined Ms. Martinez. She 27 28 ¹² Dr. Patel’s medical records corroborate that Ms. Martinez continued to have disabling psychiatric problems after March 2, 2015, contrary to what Prudential’s psychiatrist peer reviewer consultant concluded.

1 complained of anxiety and depression, that she “still has trouble sleeping,” and 2 advised that she was with the same psychiatrist but was changing her 3 psychologist/therapist to Robert Thompson. After performing a physical exam that 4 included a psychiatric assessment, other tests and observing that Ms. Martinez was 5 “emotionally labile,” Dr. Patel again diagnosed her with general anxiety disorder 6 and major depressive disorder, among other things. She noted that Ms. Martinez 7 was to continue her active psychiatric medications for depression and anxiety, 8 escitalopram/Lexapro, Alprazolam/Xanax and Trazodone.

10 67. On September 2, 2015, Ms. Martinez had her initial consultation and 11 psychotherapy session with Robert H. Thompson, LCSW, another licensed therapist 12 with Pacific Coast Healthsystems (after previously seeing both Dr. Afshar and/or 13 Dr. Banerjee regularly since November 2014 and January 2015, respectively, a 14 psychiatrist and psychologist with Pacific Coast Healthsystems). Thompson 15 interviewed Ms. Martinez about her life, family and work situation. He noted that 16 she was divorced with children and “her job is a business liaison for Chase 17 Banking.” He observed during the therapy session that Ms. Martinez “has 18 [increased] emotionality as she easily tears up.” He spoke with the Pacific Coast 19 psychiatrist, Dr. Afshar and learned that the patient was on an anti-depressant as 20 well as Trazadone for sleep and Xanax for anxiety. He further noted that the patient 21 has been off work “for nearly 1 year due to severe anxiety, panic attacks and 22 depression.” He noted that Ms. Martinez “continues to have panic attacks even 23 though Dr. Afshar has upped the dosage on [her] anti-depressant.” Based on his 24 exam and the information from Dr. Afshar, therapist Thompson diagnosed Ms.
25 Martinez with recurrent major depressive disorder (296.3) and panic disorder 26 (300.01), and also concluded that she “feels ill prepared at present to return to her 27 work.”
28

1 68. On September 8, 2015, Dr. Chambers recorded in his progress notes 2 that Ms. Martinez now gets a “sudden onset of intense pain with no particular 3 activity” in her knee, not just when she is walking and standing. He noted that the 4 patient wants surgery and his assessment plan included “arthroscopy possible 5 meniscectomy.”

7 69. On September 9, 2015, therapist Thompson had a follow-up with Ms.
8 Martinez. Thompson continued treating Ms. Martinez on a weekly basis for 9 psychotherapy thereafter through the present, including on September 9, 2015, 10 September 16, 2015, September 23, 2015, October 7, 2015, October 14, 2015, 11 October 21, 2015, November 4, 2015, November 11, 2015, November 17, 2015, 12 November 24, 2015, December 2, 2015, December 9, 2015, December 30, 2015, 13 January 6, 2016, January 13, 2016, February 24, 2016, March 2, 2016, March 9, 14 2016, March 16, 2016, March 23, 2016, April 16, 2016, May 11, 2016, May 18, 15 2016, May 25, 2016, June 1, 2016, June 8, 2016, June 15, 2016, June 30, 2016 and 16 continuing (a total of twenty-nine exams/psychotherapy sessions as of mid-2016).
17 In each progress note, Thompson recorded Ms. Martinez’s mental health (and 18 sometimes physical health) symptoms and contributing factors and documented that 19 he worked on improving her severe depression, anxiety and panic attacks.
20 Thompson recorded Ms. Martinez’s complaints of knee pain during the September 21 9, 2016 session, as reflected in the progress notes.

23 70. On September 16, 2015, Thompson treated Ms. Martinez for severe, 24 disabling depression, anxiety, panic attacks and resulting insomnia in a 25 psychotherapy session. He further noted “patient due for [knee] surgery in the next 26 6 weeks.”

28 71. On September 17, 2015, Ms. Martinez appealed Prudential’s claim denial and submitted additional medical records, namely, the March 29, 2015 and July 5, 2015 MRIs of her right knee and shoulder, respectively, referenced above. Ms. Martinez advised Prudential that she continued to suffer from depression, anxiety, panic attacks, poor concentration and loss of sleep requiring current prescriptions of anti-depressants and anxiety medication, Trazadone/Desyrel (150 mg), Lexapro/escitalopram/ (20 mg), and Alprazolam/Xanax (.5 mg). Her Trazadone prescription dosage had significantly increased indicating her depression had worsened. While she was still disabled from her mental disorder that had continuously prevented her from working since September 2014, she advised Prudential that a fall at work at Chase Bank in 2013 where she injured her right knee and shoulder had progressively deteriorated to the point that she was in substantial pain starting in February 2015 and would now require meniscus surgery. She made a claim for all these conditions, including that she could not work due to these conditions affecting her “physical and mental health.”

72. On September 21, 2015, Dr. Afshar treated Ms. Martinez in a psychiatric session and started her on a new anti-depressant/anti-psychotic medication for patients experiencing severe depression with psychotic symptoms, Abilify.¹³ She also refilled all her other existing anti-depressant and anxiety medications. Dr. Afshar concluded that Ms. Martinez is still depressed.

73. On September 23, 2015, Thompson treated Ms. Martinez for severe, disabling depression, anxiety, panic attacks and resulting insomnia in a psychotherapy session. He further noted “patient has increased anxiety over past 2 days” and worries. Licensed therapist Thompson concluded Ms. Martinez was still

1 disabled from performing her occupation at Chase Bank as of September 2015. He 2 based his opinion on his continuing weekly psychotherapy sessions with her and his 3 discussions with her psychiatrist, Dr. Afshar, whom he works closely with at Pacific 4 Coast Healthsystems. Specifically, he opined:

 6 When seen [on] 9/2/15 Dora had continued Panic Attacks and Major 7 Depression. She remained unable to return to her position she has with 8 Chase. I diagnosed Dora with Panic and Major Depression. Both 9 diagnostic descriptions which fall under the seriously mentally ill 10 umbrella.

12 At this time Dora is more disabled than initially. I find it hard to 13 understand why her disability insurance has been cut off. (Emphasis 14 added).

 16 74. Thompson also noted that Ms. Martinez commenced treatment with Dr.
 17 Afshar on November 17, 2014 and that she has met with her on a monthly basis ever 18 since (i.e. through the date of his opinion report, September 23, 2015). Thompson 19 noted that, based thereon, Dr. Afshar had diagnosed her with generalized anxiety 20 disorder and depression, and that she was consistently treated with Lexapro, 21 Trazadone and Xanax, during that entire time frame. Thompson also noted Ms.
 22 Martinez's physical health problems, including that she has met with an orthopedic 23 surgeon who plans to perform surgery on her right knee.

 25 75. On September 30, 2015, Dr. Chambers, Ms. Martinez's attending 26 orthopedic surgeon stated to Prudential in a letter, "Ms. Martinez is an ongoing 27 patient of mine being treated for medial meniscus tear of the right knee. She was 28 initially seen on 3/24/2015 and most recently on 9/28/2015. At this time she is 1 pending arthroscopic surgery for repair of meniscal tear.”

3 76. On October 2, 2015, Ms. Martinez treated with her chiropractor, Dr.
4 Thomas for her knee and shoulder pain and, also commenced treatment for pain in 5 her right foot and low back.

7 77. On October 6, 2015, Dr. Thomas advised Prudential that Ms. Martinez 8 had been his ongoing patient since 2003 but renewed treatment when she starting 9 experiencing continuing pain in her right knee and shoulder in 2015. He therefore 10 referred her for the MRI evaluations noted above (in March and July 2015). Dr.
11 Thomas concluded that the MRIs showed that her right “knee was positive for a torn 12 medial meniscus” and her right “shoulder was positive for degenerative changes” 13 causing Ms. Martinez continuous knee pain of 8-to-9 out of 10 and shoulder pain of 14 6-out-of-10, with 10 being “unbearable pain.” Dr. Chambers informed Prudential 15 that he had thus referred his patient to an orthopedic surgeon.

17 78. On November 2, 2015, Ms. Martinez had an x-ray on her right foot as 18 referred by her chiropractor, Dr. Thomas, to evaluate for a stress fracture because 19 she started experiencing significant pain in her right foot in October 2015. The x-20 ray was negative for a fracture but showed a mild hallux valgus deformity of the 21 first metatarsophalangeal joint in her right foot, which was abnormal.

23 79. On December 1, 2015, therapist Thompson reiterated many of the same 24 opinions he had expressed in his September 23, 2015 report. He reported that Ms.
25 Martinez, since September 2015 when he started treating her, had continued weekly 26 psychotherapy with him and was on the same psychiatric anti-depressant and 27 anxiety medications, Lexapro, Trazadone/Desyrel and Xanax. Based on his 28 numerous, weekly in-person exams and therapy sessions, he concluded again that

1 Ms. Martinez was still disabled from performing her occupation at Chase Bank as 2 of December 2015, noting that she “is clearly unable to function at her position.”
 3 Thompson concluded that Ms. Martinez had the following functional limits and 4 symptoms: panic attacks, neuro-vegetative symptoms of “major depression,” 5 excessive worry, loss of interest, feelings of hopelessness and helplessness, 6 diminished ability to concentrate, “fearful of committing banking errors,” “in bed 7 for prolonged periods,” and does not shower or dress for up to three days.
 8 Thompson noted Ms. Martinez’s other ongoing physical health problems, upcoming 9 surgery on her knee and possibly her shoulder.

 11 80. On December 9, 2015, during one of Thompson’s ongoing weekly 12 psychotherapy sessions (where he continued to treat Ms. Martinez for severe, 13 disabling depression, anxiety, panic attacks and resulting insomnia), he documented 14 in his progress note: patient has “paranoia while waiting out back at home. She 15 fears attack when in shower.”

 17 81. On December 15, 2015, Prudential retained a board-certified 18 orthopedic surgeon to review Ms. Martinez’s LTD claim as it pertained to her 19 physical ailments, David H. Trotter, M.D., and a psychiatrist as it pertained to her 20 mental disorders, Eric M. Chavez, M.D. Prudential retained and relied upon these 21 two medical consultants for its appeal review and to support its eventual appeal 22 denial. Dr. Chavez is part of MES Peer Review Services (“MES”).

 24 82. On December 23, 2015, after reviewing Ms. Martinez’s medical 25 records including without limit the MRIs of her knee and shoulder, Dr. Trotter wrote 26 a peer review report of his opinions. Prudential’s own medical consultant 27 concluded Ms. Martinez had the following medically necessary functional 28 restrictions and limitations from working, among others: “the limitations for the

1 knee are no standing and/or walking up to 45 minutes at a time and no more than 2 2 hours combined in an 8 hour day;” and right shoulder “limitations are only 3 occasional over the shoulder reaching and occasional lifting and carrying up to 10 4 pounds and pushing, pulling up to 20 pounds.” Dr. Trotter concluded Ms.
5 Martinez’s knee limits started on February 3, 2015 and continued at least through 6 the date of his December 23, 2015 report (and likely thereafter since he noted that 7 the medical records confirmed plans for future right knee surgery to repair Ms.
8 Martinez’s torn meniscus confirmed by the MRI). Namely, Dr. Trotter stated, “The 9 first mention of the claimant’s knee pain was an appointment with her internal 10 medicine physician on 2/3/15 in which she stated she fell at work and bent her knee 11 the wrong way. The claimant complained of pain in the medial part of the knee.”

13 83. Dr. Chavez wrote a peer review report in December 2015 for 14 Prudential. He concluded based purely on a review of Ms. Martinez’s medical 15 records, without ever examining her or speaking with her or any of her physicians, 16 that she was mildly depressed and anxious but that there was not sufficient medical 17 evidence in her file to support any psychiatric impairments or medical work 18 restrictions and limitations at any time from September 2014 onward. Prudential’s 19 new psychiatrist consultant for the appeal, Dr. Chavez, directly contradicted the 20 opinion of Dr. Hayes, Prudential’s own employee psychiatrist that it used to deny 21 her initial claim. He explicitly stated in his report, “My opinion differs from the 22 assessment of Dr. Hayes . . . [that] the claimant did have psychiatric impairments 23 from 9/10/14 until 3/2/15.” Dr. Chavez reasoned that the medical records failed to 24 document “severe symptoms” like “psychosis,” “risk to self,” “hospitalization” or 25 referral to “a psychiatric intensive outpatient program.” Dr. Chavez arbitrarily 26 required a minimum threshold that, for Ms. Martinez to be considered disabled from 27 working, she must be suicidal, psychotic/ delusional or confined to a mental 28 hospital, none of which are required by Prudential’s group policy.

1 84. Thereafter, as before, therapist Thompson and Dr. Afshar, her 2 psychiatrist, continued to regularly treat Ms. Martinez on a weekly and monthly 3 basis, respectively, for severe, disabling depression, anxiety, panic attacks and 4 resulting insomnia.

6 85. On January 6, 2016, Prudential reaffirmed its claim denial and rejected
7 Ms. Martinez's September 17, 2015 (first) administrative appeal of Prudential's 8 claim decision. It based its decision primarily upon the opinions of its two medical 9 consultants for the appeal, Drs. Chavez and Trotter (abandoning the opinion of Dr.
10 Hayes without explanation). Prudential again reasoned "the information in your file 11 does not support impairment that would prevent you from performing [the] material 12 and substantial duties of your regular occupation." Relying on Dr. Chavez's 13 opinion, Prudential concluded Ms. Martinez had no restrictions and/or limitations 14 from a psychiatric condition from the time she reported her claim in September 15 2014 through the present (despite that its own in-house psychiatrist, Dr. Hayes had 16 already concluded the opposite from September 2014 to March 2, 2015). While 17 Prudential agreed that Ms. Martinez does have physical restrictions and limitations 18 from her knee and shoulder conditions that would prevent her from working, it 19 concluded that since those impairments did not begin until February 2015 it could 20 not consider them because she had already lost coverage under the Policy by that 21 date.

23 The reviewer [Dr. Trotter] concluded that you would have restrictions/24 limitations due to your knee condition; however, these would not have 25 been in effect until you first received treatment for your knee pain on 26 February 3, 2015.

28 Prudential reasoned that since Ms. Martinez was not in "active employment" nor did

1 she have any disabling conditions from September 2014 until February 2015 2 (directly contradicting its April 2015 denial), she had already lost coverage under 3 the Policy when her knee condition commenced and, therefore, was not entitled to 4 LTD benefits.

6 86. Just as in its initial denial letter, Prudential in its appeal denial failed to 7 identify or even discuss Ms. Martinez's occupational duties. Again, it did not 8 mention or distinguish Chase Bank's decision to award Ms. Martinez STD benefits 9 (based on its finding that she was disabled due to depression and anxiety).

11 87. As discussed above, and for the reasons explained below, the medical 12 and other evidence, including from Prudential's own psychiatrist consultant, 13 patently contradicts Prudential's erroneous conclusion that Ms. Martinez was not 14 disabled from performing the material and substantial duties of her regular 15 occupation. The reasons stated in Prudential's claim denials are wrong.

17 88. On January 11, 2016, Dr. Afshar treated Ms. Martinez in a psychiatric 18 session and refilled her anti-depressant and anxiety medications, and continued to do 19 so monthly through the present.

21 89. On January 13, 2016, Thompson treated Ms. Martinez for severe, 22 disabling depression, anxiety, panic attacks and resulting insomnia in a 23 psychotherapy session, and continued to do so weekly through the present.

25 90. On February 2, 2016, Dr. Chambers had a consult with Ms. Martinez 26 for her ongoing right shoulder and right foot pain. She had been seeing her 27 chiropractor and taking Ibuprofen for that pain. Dr. Chambers reviewed her July 5, 28 2015 MRI and determined the results were abnormal, showing joint arthritis in her

1 right shoulder. He physically examined her and performed objective palpation and 2 range of motion tests which confirmed diffuse tenderness in her right shoulder and 3 significantly decreased range of motion. Dr. Chambers diagnosed her with 4 osteoarthritis in her right shoulder, referred her to 4 weeks of physical therapy, two 5 times per week, and prescribed pain medication, Voltaren.

7 91. On February 8, 2016, Dr. Patel examined Ms. Martinez for her right 8 knee pain, mental health and other issues. After performing a physical exam that 9 included a psychiatric assessment, other tests and observing that Ms. Martinez was 10 “emotionally labile” and “still emotional but goes to” cognitive behavioral therapy, 11 Dr. Patel re-diagnosed her with major depressive disorder and general anxiety 12 disorder, just as she had done during her initial September 2014 visit and each and 13 every visit thereafter. Dr. Patel’s treatment plan included continue anti-depressants, 14 continue cognitive behavioral therapy and to walk as best she could for her diabetes 15 and cholesterol (as well as to take Crestor). Dr. Patel specifically noted that Ms.
16 Martinez was to continue her active psychiatric medications for depression and 17 anxiety, escitalopram/Lexapro, Alprazolam/Xanax and Trazodone/Desyrel.

19 92. On February 8, 2016, Chase Bank terminated Ms. Martinez’s 20 employment effective the following day, February 9, 2016. Ms. Martinez confirmed 21 to Chase at that time that she is not able to return to work and does not know when 22 she will be able to return given her disabilities. This corroborates that Ms. Martinez 23 is disabled. She certainly would not have left her high-paying job with a $90,260 24 annual salary if she was able to perform her job duties. She had no other job or 25 source of income. She was and is completely out of work; Prudential denied her 26 LTD claim; nor had she been awarded any public disability benefits at that time.
27 The termination letter further evidences that her employer does not believe she is 28 able to adequately perform her job duties or it would not have terminated her.

1 93. On March 7, 2016, Dr. Afshar treated Ms. Martinez in a psychiatric 2 session and refilled her anti-depressant and anxiety medications, noting that she was 3 on Lexapro, Desyrel/Trazadone and Xanax. Dr. Afshar concluded that Ms.
4 Martinez “still [experiences] poor sleep” and thus increased her Desyrel dosage.

6 94. Dr. Chambers’ progress notes of March 14, 2016 confirm Ms. Martinez 7 continued to have significant pain in her right shoulder, that she could not lift it, as 8 confirmed by objective palpation and range of motion tests, and that he prescribed 9 the same treatment and noted the need for a possible cortisone injection. Further, 10 that Ms. Martinez continued to have significant pain in her foot, especially with 11 pressure and walking.

13 95. On March 23, 2016, Thompson continued to treat Ms. Martinez 14 weekly for severe, disabling depression, anxiety, panic attacks and resulting 15 insomnia in a psychotherapy session. He also noted in his progress notes patient has 16 symptoms of paranoia. She gave her social security number to her physical therapist 17 and now has “doubts” and “couldn’t sleep at night after giving” the number out.

19 96. On April 11, 2016, Dr. Patel examined Ms. Martinez and cleared her 20 for right knee surgery with Dr. Chambers in a pre-operative visit. He noted that his 21 patient would have arthroscopic surgery of her right knee to repair her right medial 22 meniscus on April 15. Dr. Patel noted that Ms. Martinez has experienced right knee 23 pain for over one year and that an MRI confirmed the meniscus tear. Dr. Patel 24 performed objective tests and concluded she had tenderness in the medial part of her 25 right knee. She diagnosed her with tear of medial meniscus of right knee. Dr. Patel 26 also diagnosed Ms. Martinez with ongoing major depressive disorder commencing 27 2014 through the present. She stated that her patient has ongoing depression, 28 anxiety and panic attacks and continues to see a psychiatrist, Dr. Afshar, and

1 Thompson for cognitive behavioral therapy. She recorded in her progress notes that 2 Ms. Martinez's active medications included anti-depressants and anxiety 3 medications, Trazodone/ Desyrel, escitalopram/ Lexapro and Alprazolam/ Xanax.

5 97. On April 14, 2016, Dr. Chambers recorded in his progress notes that 6 Ms. Martinez was here for a pre-operation evaluation for her right knee surgery. He 7 put her on Codeine and noted again her "maximum tenderness" in her right knee 8 upon palpation, which she had experienced since his initial knee consult in March 9 2015.

11 98. On April 15, 2016, Dr. Chambers operated on Ms. Martinez's right 12 knee, a diagnostic video arthroscopy under general anesthesia. He concluded based 13 upon his operative findings that Ms. Martinez had arthritis and cartilage damage in 14 the lateral compartment of her right knee. After suturing the incisions for the 15 arthroscopic insertion, he injected her knee with corticosteroid.

17 99. On April 25, 2016, Dr. Chambers recorded in his post-operative visit 18 report that Ms. Martinez still has pain and swelling of the knee. Dr. Chambers 19 stated that she "can only stand or walk about 10-15 minutes." He noted significant 20 abnormality in her range of motion and started her on post-operative physical 21 therapy.

23 100. On May 2, 2016, Ms. Martinez started physical therapy on her right 24 knee. She had another session on May 4, 2016 and again on May 9, 2016.
25

26 101. On May 5, 2016, John Sedgh, M.D., board-certified in internal 27 medicine, examined Ms. Martinez in-person. Dr. Sedgh was retained by the SSA as 28 part of its review of Ms. Martinez's claim to the SSA for government SSDI benefits.

1 Dr. Sedgh conducted a complete “internal medical assessment of alleged disability.”
2 This included his in-person physical exam of Ms. Martinez, formal objective testing, 3 “observations of the claimant’s spontaneous actions,” and interviewing Ms.
4 Martinez about her present complaints and medical history. Dr. Sedgh diagnosed 5 Ms. Martinez with: (1) Right knee arthritis; and (2) Right shoulder arthritis. He 6 specifically documented that his diagnosis was based on his objective testing and 7 stated that, “Objectively, there is a limited range of motion of the right knee and 8 both shoulders. The gait is moderately antalgic.” Despite that Dr. Sedgh was 9 retained by an independent government agency, the SSA, and has no allegiance to 10 Ms. Martinez, he concluded that Ms. Martinez has the following functional limits, 11 among others: (1) “The claimant can stand and walk for two hours out of an eight-12 hour workday;” (2) “It is my opinion that the claimant does need a cane as an 13 assistive device for long distances.” Thus, in Dr. Sedgh’s professional medical 14 opinion, Ms. Martinez is physically disabled from performing any job that requires 15 these types of activities, and her position requires standing and walking for far 16 longer, typically more than six hours per day.

18 102. On May 9, 2016, Dr. Chambers recorded in his post-operative visit 19 report that Ms. Martinez “continues to have pain, sometimes bad” and despite the 20 physical therapy, “it hurts to bend her knee” requiring her to take pain medication.
21 He performed objective tests on her knee and shoulder which showed continued 22 pain in both and abnormal range of motion in her knee. Ms. Martinez also reported 23 continuing pain in her right shoulder and that she would like physical therapy for her 24 shoulder too. Dr. Chambers prescribed continued physical therapy on her knee and 25 initiated therapy for her shoulder for three weeks, twice per week.

26
27 103. On May 11, 2016, during one of Thompson’s weekly psychotherapy 28 sessions with Ms. Martinez for severe, disabling depression, anxiety, panic attacks

1 and resulting insomnia, he documented in his progress notes that Ms. Martinez is 2 “becoming more isolated at home” and experiencing fear different than her regular 3 panic attacks.

5 104. On May 13, 16, 20 and 23, 2016, Ms. Martinez continued physical 6 therapy on her right knee.

8 105. On May 18, 2016, Dr. Thomas, Ms. Martinez’s chiropractor that has 9 treated her since 2003, examined her for right knee pain, right shoulder pain and low 10 back pain. She complained of those ongoing conditions, rated her right shoulder 11 pain at eight-to-nine out of ten with ten representing “unbearable pain” and stated 12 that she has lost strength in her right hand to the point where she drops things. Dr.
13 Thomas performed objective tests and physically examined her right knee, right 14 shoulder and lumbar spine. He conducted range of motion tests on her knee and 15 concluded the range was “decreased approximately 25% in flexion and 5% in 16 extension.” Additionally, palpation tests confirmed palpatory tenderness of +2 in 17 the medial and lateral joint line and in the patellar tendon. His exam revealed a 18 “post-op scar of the right knee.” Range of motion in Ms. Martinez’s right shoulder 19 likewise was abnormal, “approximately 50% of normal.” Objective Tinel’s test was 20 positive in the right wrist for median nerve dysfunction. Palpation tests showed +1 21 in the right shoulder/subscapularis. Resisted range of motion caused pain in Ms.
22 Martinez’s right bicep. The empty can test was positive for pain in her right 23 shoulder as well. Range of motion in the lumbar spine was decreased by 20% in 24 flexion and 5% for all other motions. A straight leg test was positive for pain on the 25 right. She had palpatory tenderness of +2 bilaterally in her sacroiliac joints and at 26 the L3-L5 level of her lumbar spine.
27

28 106. On May 25, 2016, Dr. Thomas wrote a detailed report of his opinions

1 about Ms. Martinez's physical functional restrictions and limitations due to her right 2 knee, right shoulder and low back pain/conditions. He based his opinions on his 3 May 18, 2016 physical exam of Ms. Martinez, his extensive treatment history with 4 the patient since 2003 (including nine recent exams of her since the onset of her 5 knee and shoulder pain in February 2015), objective MRI and x-ray imaging and 6 testing, his discussions with the patient, and his review of the patient's job 7 descriptions at Chase Bank as a Business Relationship Manager (which job duties he 8 outlined in his report as including walking for substantial portions of her workday 9 while at client meetings and also driving to get to the meetings).

11 107. Dr. Thomas reiterated in his May 25, 2016 report that Ms. Martinez had 12 been his ongoing patient since 2003 but has recently treated with him for knee pain, 13 shoulder pain and low back pain, as well as sciatica (in the past). He noted she had 14 an MRI in 2005 that was positive for multiple disc bulges and degenerative disc 15 disease. He further noted that he had referred her for other MRI evaluations noted 16 above (in March and July 2015) on her right knee and right shoulder due to her 17 continuing complaints of pain in those areas. Dr. Thomas concluded that the MRIs 18 showed that her right "knee was positive for a torn medial meniscus" and her right 19 "shoulder was positive for degenerative changes." More specifically, upon 20 reviewing Ms. Martinez's March 29, 2015 MRI films of her right knee, he 21 determined they were abnormal and concluded the films pictured a medial meniscus 22 tear, chondromalacia patella, a joint effusion and potentially bursitis of the right 23 knee. Dr. Thomas noted that the patient recently had surgery to repair the meniscus 24 tear on April 15, 2016. Dr. Thomas diagnosed Ms. Martinez currently with: (1) 25 Post-op medial meniscus surgery, right knee; (2) Shoulder tendonitis, bilaterally; (3) 26 Lumbar enthesopathy; and (4) Brachial neuritis. He concluded Ms. Martinez needs 27 further treatment for her knee and shoulder and possibly a candidate for shoulder 28 surgery. But he would like her to consult with an orthopedic surgeon to further 1 evaluate her shoulder issues and lumbar spine issues.

3 108. Dr. Thomas concluded in his May 25, 2016 report that Ms. Martinez 4 was and is disabled from performing her occupational duties continuously since 5 February 2015 through the present due to her physical ailments, i.e. her knee, 6 shoulder and low back. He further concluded her physical disability would continue 7 for at least an additional three to six months and possibly permanently:

9 In my professional opinion, at the very least, she is temporarily totally 10 disabled and has been at all times since February 2015 through the 11 present [May 25, 2016].

12 *****

13 With regard to her disability status, based on the job description I have 14 been given, it is my professional opinion that she is unable to do her 15 job description at this time and has been unable to do so since February 16 2015. I believe she is temporarily totally disabled. I would recommend 17 a re-evaluation in 3 to 6 months to determine whether she continues to 18 be unable to perform her job duties. The patient may be permanently 19 disabled, however; there remain several unresolved issues that require 20 further evaluation and possible treatment for those issues.

22 He concluded that she had the following walking, standing and sitting/driving 23 functional restrictions and limitations due to her right knee, right shoulder and low 24 back conditions and, therefore, was unable to perform her job duties:

25
26 Due to her lumbar spine and knee issues, she would be able to stand 27 and/or walk for approximately 2 hours before she would need a short 28 break, likely 10-20 minutes, in my professional opinion. At the very

1 most, I would anticipate that she could stand and/or walk combined a 2 maximum of 3 to 4 hours a day. In other words, it is my opinion that 3 she can stand, walk, or do a combination of those two activities for at 4 most 3 to 4 hours a day total between both activities. To clarify, that is 5 not saying that she could stand for 3 to 4 hours and also walk for 3 to 4 6 hours in the same day, it is 3 to 4 hours total. Her job requires driving 7 as well. She would not be able to sit more than 20 to 30 minutes 8 without the necessity of altering her position or taking a break, in my 9 professional opinion, and can sit a maximum of 3 to 4 hours a day.
 10 (Emphasis added).

 12 109. On May 19, 2016, Rama Nadella, M.D., a board-certified psychiatrist 13 acting on the SSA's behalf in connection with Ms. Martinez's SSDI government 14 benefits claim, independently examined her. At the exam, Dr. Nadella interviewed 15 Ms. Martinez, obtained her job duties, observed her, performed a complete mental 16 status examination including numerous objective psychiatric tests (such as 17 "memory," "concentration and calculation," "serial threes," "proverbs," "similarities 18 and differences," "insight and judgment"), and took an extensive 19 medical/psychiatric, family, environmental and social history. Dr. Nadella 20 concluded, after conducting the complete psychiatric exam, that Ms. Martinez is 21 psychiatrically disabled from performing any type of work, including that she has 22 the following functional limits: (1) "The claimant is not able to perform simple and 23 repetitive tasks. She is not [able] to perform detailed and complex tasks;" (2) "She is 24 not able to maintain regular attendance in a work setting;" (3) "She is markedly 25 limited in performing work activities on a consistent basis;" (4) "The claimant is 26 moderately limited in performing work activities without additional supervision;"
 27 (5) "She is markedly limited in completing a normal workday without interruption;"
 28 (6) "She is moderately limited in accepting instructions from supervisors;" (7) "Her

1 ability to interact with the public, coworkers and supervisor is moderately limited;”
 2 and (8) “The claimant is moderately limited in dealing with the usual stressors 3 encountered in competitive work.”

5 110. Dr. Nadella diagnosed Ms. Martinez with: (1) Major depression; (2) 6 Panic disorder; and (3) Adjustment disorder with anxiety and depression due to 7 work stress. She concluded Ms. Martinez has a GAF score of 50, meaning she has 8 severe symptoms of mental illness and that her ability to function at work is severely
 9 impaired. See http://www.albany.edu/counseling_center/docs/GAF.pdf (A GAF 10 score between 41 and 50 means she has “serious symptoms (e.g., suicidal ideation, 11 severe obsessional rituals, frequent shoplifting) OR any serious impairment in 12 social, occupational, or school functioning (e.g., no friends, unable to keep a job).”

14 111. On June 13, 2016, Dr. Afshar wrote a letter responding to Prudential 15 and its psychiatrist consultant, Kevin Hayes, M.D. Dr. Afshar explained that Dr.
 16 Hayes had misinterpreted her “stable” comment in her March 2, 2015 progress 17 notes. Dr. Afshar clarified that by “stable” she absolutely did not mean that Ms.
 18 Martinez was ready to resume work as of March 2, 2015. To the contrary, Dr.
 19 Afshar stated:

21 I am the treating psychiatrist for Dora Martinez since her first visit on 22 November 17, 2014. I am responding to Prudential's interpretation of 23 my comment on the patient being "stable" on March 2, 2015. Stable is a 24 comment regarding a patient's response to psychiatric medications I 25 prescribe. When a patient is unstable there is a side effect or some 26 intolerance of a medication. If unstable, a patient would require a 27 change of medication.
 28

1 It seems the Prudential's psychiatrist interpreted "stable" to mean 2 permanent and stationary, therefore Dora was ready to resume work.
3 This was certainly not the intent of any use of the word "stable".
4 (Emphasis added).

6 112. Thus, it is Dr. Afshar's opinion that Ms. Martinez could not perform 7 her job duties in March 2015, contrary to how Dr. Hayes's interpreted her progress 8 notes. Dr. Afshar also noted in her report that Ms. Martinez was put on disability by 9 her primary care physician, and her focus has been "resolving her psychological 10 disorder through psychiatric medications" and also by referring her to weekly 11 psychotherapy.

13 113. On June 15, 2016, during one of his weekly psychotherapy sessions for 14 depression and anxiety which he had been doing since September 2015, Thompson 15 documented in his progress notes: "patient fearful to go outside at night to lock or 16 move a car. She requires a family member escort her outside. She doesn't like to 17 go out alone." He further noted that Ms. Martinez reports a burning pain four inches 18 below her knee but that her knee is "slowly improving."

20 114. On June 20, 2016, Dr. Patel concluded in her professional opinion as a 21 board-certified internist, after having treated Ms. Martinez for twenty-five years, 22 most recently since September 9, 2014 for anxiety and depression and since 23 February 13, 2015 for knee pain, and after reading her job description as a Business 24 Relationship Manager at Chase Bank, that she was and still is unable to perform her 25 job duties because of anxiety, depression and right knee pain requiring surgery. Dr.
26 Patel specifically concluded as follows:

27
28 In regards to our patient, Ms. Martinez, it is my opinion after reading her job description that she is unable to perform her duties given her most recent medical conditions. Most recently, Dora had Right Knee surgery by Dr. Chambers on 4/15/2016. On her office visits, she always complained of anxiety and depression which I concur with her referring physicians. Since she still has a problem with her knee, depression, and anxiety, I do not recommend her to start work in the near future.

Dr. Patel's letter confirms she still holds the opinion that Ms. Martinez was disabled in 2016, just as she also opined in 2014 and 2015 when she treated her for anxiety and depression.

115. On June 21, 2016, the SSA approved Ms. Martinez's claim for SSDI benefits after having two separate health care providers, Drs. Nadella and Sedgh, examine her mental (depression, anxiety, panic attacks) and physical symptoms (shoulder and knee), i.e. they conducted an in-person independent psychiatric examination and an in-person medical examination. Based upon these independent exam reports, the SSA awarded Ms. Martinez SSDI benefits and "found that [Ms. Martinez] became disabled under our rules on September 10, 2014." The SSA's retroactive, ongoing Notice of Award letter shows an independent entity considers Ms. Martinez disabled from working from September 10, 2014 through the present.

116. On June 22, 2016, therapist Thompson wrote a letter again certifying that Ms. Martinez is mentally disabled from working. He reiterated many of the same opinions he had expressed in his September 23, 2015 and December 1, 2015 reports. Therapist Thompson reported that he has been treating Ms. Martinez for weekly psychotherapy ever since she was referred to him by Dr. Afshar, a psychiatrist also with Pacific Coast Healthsystems, i.e. since September 2, 2015.

1 Based on his numerous, weekly in-person exams and therapy sessions, he concluded 2 again that Ms. Martinez was still disabled from performing her occupation at Chase 3 Bank as of June 2016 and always has been at least since September 2015 when he 4 started treating her, noting that she is “in no condition to resume her position at the 5 bank.” He stated, “Clearly, Ms. Martinez has been disabled from 9/2/15 to present 6 [6/22/16].” Thompson further concluded that Ms. Martinez had the following 7 functional limits and symptoms: recurring panic attacks, activities of daily living 8 deteriorated as she would not shower for several days, sad, frequently tearful and 9 upset, loss of interest in previously enjoyed interests, feelings of hopelessness and 10 helplessness, diminished ability to concentrate, insomnia, fearful of making 11 mistakes that would lead to losses to the bank or to customer accounts, and loss of 12 confidence in working with numbers and balances. Thompson reiterated that he had 13 diagnosed her with “recurring Major Depression that at times has had psychotic 14 features” such as feeling like an intruder could possibly assault her.

16 117. On July 15, 2016, Ms. Martinez, through her counsel, appealed 17 Prudential’s denial of her disability benefits. Her lawyers pointed out the flaws in 18 Prudential’s benefits decision, both its April 2015 and January 2016 denial letters.
19 For example, they summarized the overwhelming medical evidence that 20 unequivocally established Ms. Martinez was and is continuously disabled from 21 September 2014 through the present, contrary to what Prudential had concluded.
22 Furthermore, they explained that Prudential: (1) failed to determine Ms. Martinez’s 23 occupational duties, a critical part of any disability analysis; (2) improperly relied on 24 the “paper reviews” of two biased psychiatrist consultants, neither of whom 25 examined or spoke with Ms. Martinez, and whose poorly reasoned opinions directly 26 contradicted each other; (3) improperly required Ms. Martinez to meet a heightened 27 standard of “disability” not contained in the group policy; and (4) ignored the 28 contrary decision from an independent entity (and its psychologist consultant),

1 Chase Bank, finding Ms. Martinez disabled from performing the duties of her 2 occupation under the terms of its STD plan.

4 118. Ms. Martinez's lawyers submitted with the appeal a large volume of 5 supporting evidence, including her updated medical/psychological records discussed 6 in this Complaint, several letters from her attending physicians and mental health 7 care providers (certifying that she was and is disabled from performing her 8 occupational duties and refuting the inaccurate conclusions of Prudential's medical 9 consultants), Ms. Martinez's official job description, and the award of disability 10 benefits from the SSA finding Ms. Martinez totally disabled from performing any 11 type of work including her own due to her depression, anxiety and knee/orthopedic 12 problems. Ms. Martinez's lawyers highlighted the SSA's conclusion that she was 13 disabled and warned Prudential that Ninth Circuit case law is clear that it cannot 14 disregard the SSA's finding but must explain why it disagrees to the extent it does.

16 119. Counsel also requested in the appeal letter that any communications 17 between Prudential's consulting physicians and Ms. Martinez's treating physicians/18 therapists be in writing, with at least two weeks' notice and a copy sent to counsel, 19 so that Ms. Martinez and her physicians would have a fair opportunity to respond to 20 questions from Prudential's medical consultants. The appeal letter made this request 21 in bold so that Prudential could not miss it. Prudential disregarded the request and 22 again had its medical consultants place "cold calls" to Ms. Martinez's attending 23 physicians in the midst of their busy medical practices without even notifying 24 counsel, not allowing them a reasonable opportunity to respond. Ms. Martinez's 25 counsel even offered her for an in-person "independent psychiatric and/or medical 26 examination, functional capacity examination or other examination" by Prudential's 27 consultants so that all their questions could be answered and they could verify her 28 disability. But Prudential ignored the offer, again electing for less credible "paper 1 reviews” of her medical records.

3 120. On September 28, 2016 and October 21, 2016, Ms. Martinez’s counsel 4 sent letters to Prudential enclosing additional support for her appeal. The letters 5 enclosed the two IME reports prepared by the doctors retained by the SSA to 6 evaluate Ms. Martinez’s claim for SSDI benefits, Drs. Nadella and Sedgh. As 7 discussed above, the results of both in-person examinations were consistent with 8 Ms. Martinez’s treating physicians/mental health professionals finding that Ms.
9 Martinez had functional limits that prevented her from performing her own 10 occupation and, in fact, any gainful occupation (and in fact even with Prudential’s 11 own orthopedic consultant, Dr. Trotter).

13 121. On October 13, 2016, Prudential referred the matter back to Drs.
14 Chavez and Trotter to assess Ms. Martinez’s functional abilities from a psychiatric 15 and orthopedic standpoint, respectively. Prudential provided its consultants with 16 updated medical records from Ms. Martinez’s attending providers and the in-person 17 IME exam reports from the SSA’s psychiatrist and internist. Prudential again 18 requested file reviews from its consultants instead of in-person exams, despite that 19 Ms. Martinez offered herself for an IME through her counsel in her June 2016 20 appeal.

22 122. On October 17, 2016, Dr. Chavez spoke with Ms. Martinez’s treating 23 primary care physician, Dr. Patel. Dr. Patel reported that he diagnosed Ms.
24 Martinez with anxiety and depression, that she has poor concentration and crying 25 spells, and that he referred her to a psychiatrist and therapist whom have 26 consistently treated her with anti-depressants and therapy. Dr. Chavez did not even 27 try to speak with Ms. Martinez’s long-standing treating psychiatrist, Dr. Afshar, the 28 SSA psychiatrist that performed an in-person psychiatric exam and concluded she

1 was disabled, Dr. Nadella, or any of Ms. Martinez's other treating mental health 2 care professionals such as her psychotherapist, Thompson. Those were the obvious 3 professionals that Dr. Chavez should have contacted, but he did not because 4 Prudential and its "paper reviewing" consultant did not want to provide Ms.
 5 Martinez with a full and fair review of her claim as required by ERISA. They did 6 not want the opportunity to learn the reasons for their opinions that Ms. Martinez 7 was and is disabled from a psychiatric standpoint. Had Prudential provided notice 8 to Ms. Martinez's counsel (that Dr. Chavez would be contacting Dr. Patel), as 9 counsel expressly asked it to do in their July 2016 appeal letter, counsel would have 10 facilitated a meeting with the appropriate attending mental health providers that had 11 the requisite specialty instead of a PCP.¹⁴ As expected, during her conversation with 12 Dr. Chavez, Dr. Patel deferred to his patient's treating psychiatrist as the most 13 qualified physician to determine whether Ms. Martinez is disabled from depression 14 and anxiety.

 16 123. On October 20, 2016, Dr. Chavez completed a peer review report of his 17 opinions based upon his medical record review and phone conversation with Dr.
 18 Patel, and he sent it to Prudential. He advised that his original opinion had not 19 changed based upon the additional medical records and in-person exam report of the 20 SSA's psychiatrist, Dr. Nadella. He concluded, just like before, that Ms. Martinez 21 had no medically necessary work restrictions from a psychiatric standpoint. His 22 analysis remained the same, that Ms. Martinez had not displayed "psychosis," a 23 "severe mental illness," risk of self-harm or confinement to a mental hospital, and, 24 that he would have expected to see evidence of this if Ms. Martinez was truly 25 psychiatrically impaired from performing her job duties. Dr. Chavez disagreed with 26 Ms. Martinez's treating mental health care providers and Dr. Nadella (each of whom 27

28 ¹⁴ Similarly, Dr. Trotter contacted Ms. Martinez's treating chiropractor without Prudential notifying her counsel as requested in counsel's appeal letter.

1 performed in-person mental health exams and concluded she was disabled due to 2 depression, anxiety and panic attacks), on the grounds that she had not met this 3 arbitrary threshold for disability not contained in Prudential's group policy.

 5 124. On November 1, 2016, after reviewing Ms. Martinez's updated medical 6 records, Dr. Trotter wrote a peer review report of his opinions and sent it to 7 Prudential. His opinion did not change from that given to Prudential in December 8 2015. He continued to believe that Ms. Martinez, due to her right knee problem, 9 had the following medically necessary functional restrictions and limitations from 10 working as of the date of his November 2016 report, among others: "no standing 11 and/or walking up to 45 minutes at a time and no more than 2 hours combined in an 12 8 hour day." Dr. Trotter's opinions about Ms. Martinez's knee functional limits are 13 identical to what the independent SSA physician found, Dr. Sedgh.¹⁵

 15 125. On November 14, 2016, Prudential denied Ms. Martinez's July 2016 16 request for reconsideration of the appeal denial and reaffirmed its claim denial, after 17 acknowledging that she had anxiety, depression and serious orthopedic problems 18 including to her right knee. The logic of its decision mirrored that of its January 19 2016 appeal denial. As before, it reasoned there is no evidence that Ms. Martinez 20 had medically necessary work limits from a psychiatric perspective, from September 21 2014 onward (despite her anxiety and depression). And, by the time that she 22 became disabled due to her knee and other orthopedic injuries in early 2015, she 23 was no longer covered by the group policy because she was not actively working at 24 Chase Bank since September 2014.

 26
 27 ¹⁵ Prudential sloppily asked Dr. Trotter to review and opine on Dr. Nadella's report 28 (the SSA's psychiatrist consultant) but not Dr. Sedgh's report, the SSA's medical doctor that performed an in-person exam of Ms. Martinez's knee and other orthopedic complaints.

1 Although she would have restrictions and limitations that would 2 preclude her from working due to her various orthopedic complaints, 3 these conditions were not supported until after she went out of work 4 and she fell out of a covered class. As noted in the policy, coverage 5 ends when an employee is no longer in active employment. Since her 6 September 9, 2014 claim of disability was not covered under the plan, 7 she fell out of coverage.

9 Thus, the critical part of Prudential's analysis, upon which the merits of its benefits 10 decision stands or falls, is its conclusion that Ms. Martinez did not have psychiatric 11 work limits from September 2014 to early 2015. Because, if she did, she was still 12 covered under the Policy when her admittedly disabling knee condition commenced.

14 126. Prudential primarily relied upon the opinions of its psychiatrist and 15 orthopedic file reviewers, Drs. Chavez and Trotter, to deny the request for 16 reconsideration of the appeal denial, quoting extensively from their updated medical 17 record peer review reports before concluding Ms. Martinez was not entitled to 18 disability benefits. Prudential briefly and without much explanation mentioned the 19 SSA's award of disability benefits but found it did not apply. It stated that its 20 "paper reviewing" consultant, Dr. Chavez, disagreed with the SSA's psychiatrist's 21 conclusion (that Ms. Martinez was mentally disabled from working) because the 22 medical records did not document "psychosis," "risk of self-harm," "severe mental 23 illness," confinement to a mental hospital or treatment in a "psychiatric intensive 24 outpatient program." Per Prudential and its consultant Dr. Chavez, while the 25 medical records documented that Ms. Martinez had anxiety disorder and depressive 26 disorder, they did not evidence "a severe mental illness which would be expected to 27 impair function."

1 127. As with its earlier denial letters, Prudential failed to analyze Ms.
2 Martinez’s job duties, devoting only one sentence to them in its eight-page letter:
3 “Ms. Martinez’s occupation as a Business Relationship manager is a light 4 occupation which includes occasional lifting up to 20 pounds, frequent but 5 intermittent standing and walking, frequent reaching and handling and occasional 6 fingering.” Prudential did not discuss the cognitive, mental focus/concentration or 7 relationship building aspects of her occupation, despite her claimed mental 8 disability.

10 128. Prudential’s benefits decision was blatantly incorrect, including its 11 April 2015, January 2016 and November 2016 denial letters. Despite the 12 overwhelming medical evidence summarized above establishing Ms. Martinez was 13 and is disabled from September 2014 to the present due to severe depression, 14 anxiety and panic attacks, and from February 2015 to the present due to a right knee 15 meniscus tear requiring surgery and other physical problems with her right shoulder, 16 foot and low back, Prudential failed to approve Ms. Martinez’s claim for LTD 17 benefits. Instead of giving proper credence to the medical records of the physicians 18 and mental health care providers who treated and examined Ms. Martinez, 19 Prudential relied on the opinion of an in-house psychiatrist, Kevin Hayes, M.D., and 20 an outside psychiatrist consultant, Eric Chavez, M.D., who only conducted “paper 21 reviews” of Ms. Martinez’s medical records. The conclusions based on those 22 reviews were erroneous and did not provide ample support for Prudential’s claim 23 decision.

24
25 129. There are multiple problems with the conclusions of Prudential’s 26 consultants, Drs. Hayes and Chavez. First, Dr. Hayes is Prudential’s paid employee 27 and thus inclined to favor his employer, and Dr. Chavez is part of a peer review 28 organization, MES, regularly hired by Prudential that caters to the insurance industry. See Garrison v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 558 F. Supp. 2d 995, 1002 fn. 6 (C.D. Cal. 2008) (the court noted the high number of medical reviews performed by MES for Prudential and other insurance companies and that it is in the business of performing medical reviews for insurance companies); and Cathleen Myers v. The Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 2009 WL 4500252, No. 1:089-cv-22 (Mar. 27, 2009 E.D. Cal.) (In 2006, MES performed 389 reviews for Prudential and Prudential paid it $267,441.25, and in 2007 MES performed 465 reviews and was paid $301,722.50 by Prudential). These consultants are financially reliant upon Prudential and the insurance industry in general, and have been used by them repeatedly to give disability opinions. A court will review Prudential's claim denial with skepticism since it relied upon its financially conflicted, well compensated medical consultants. See Demer v. IBM Corporation LTD Plan, 2016 WL 4488006 (9th Cir. Aug. 26, 2016) (a district court's review of an insurance company's benefits decision, when it is based upon the opinion of a medical consultant used often by the insurer, should be tempered by skepticism because of the financial incentive that the consultant has to pander to the insurer's interests); Black & Decker Disability Plan v. Nord, 538 U.S. 822, 832, 155 L.Ed.2d 1034 (2003) ("Nor do we question the [Ninth Circuit] Court of Appeals' concern that physicians repeatedly retained by benefits plans may have an 'incentive to make a finding of not disabled in order to save their employers money and to preserve their own consulting arrangements.'"); and Hangerter v. Provident Life & Accident Ins. Co., 373 F.3d 998, 1011 (9th Cir. 2004) (noting that a fact-finder could reasonably conclude that an expert has lost his independence when that expert has represented an insurance company on a continual basis).

130. Prudential's consultants also failed to examine Ms. Martinez, failed to speak with her about her psychiatric condition, and failed to speak with her attending mental health care professionals, each of whom have been regularly treating her for months to years and consequently have gained great insight into her

1 mental illness and functional limits.¹⁶ Instead, they simply reviewed her medical 2 records. Therefore, their opinions based purely on a cold file review carry far less 3 weight.

5 131. Third, Dr. Hayes's conclusion rests entirely on a false assumption – his 6 erroneous interpretation of the March 2, 2015 progress note of Parvin Afshar, M.D., 7 Ms. Martinez's board-certified treating psychiatrist. Without contacting Dr. Afshar 8 to determine what she meant, and despite that her handwritten progress note is in 9 cursive, difficult to read if not illegible and includes only a brief ambiguous 10 comment using the word "stable," Dr. Hayes overreached. He broadly interpreted 11 "stable" to mean that Ms. Martinez could return to work and that she no longer had 12 disabling psychiatric symptoms of depression, anxiety and panic attacks because Dr.
13 Afshar (he thought) said she was "stable." But Dr. Afshar's cryptic March 2, 2015 14 progress note says nothing of the sort. It appears to state in full, "P/ 6 stable – no 15 S/H I no A/VH sleep & app WNL P refill meds XTrw." Dr. Hayes ran with that 16 abbreviated note and liberally interpreted "stable" to mean that, in Dr. Afshar's 17 opinion, the patient "was stable with resolution of all symptoms by 3/2/15" and that 18 the "claimant stabilized by 3/2/15 with no ongoing [restrictions/limitations] as of 19 that date."

21 132. Dr. Hayes flatly misinterpreted Dr. Afshar's cryptic comment. Dr.
22 Afshar has since explained her illegible March 2, 2015 progress note in a June 13, 23 2016 letter enclosed with Ms. Martinez's July 2016 appeal. She clarified that she 24 meant that Ms. Martinez's medications were "stable," that she was not experiencing

26 ¹⁶ Both Drs. Hayes and Chavez spoke with Dr. Patel, Ms. Martinez's primary care 27 physician. While Dr. Patel treated Ms. Martinez for anxiety and depression, she is 28 not a specialist and not the appropriate treater that they should have consulted about Ms. Martinez's mental condition. Dr. Patel referred her patient to specialists that would know more about her mental health. Indeed, Ms. Martinez was also regularly treated by a psychiatrist Dr. Afshar and psychotherapists Thompson, Isom and Banerjee.

1 side effects nor intolerant to the medications requiring a change of medication. But 2 that she never intended to imply that Ms. Martinez was ready to resume work as of 3 March 2, 2015 by writing “stable.” Dr. Afshar further explained that Dr. Hayes had 4 misinterpreted her “stable” progress note in that regard. Dr. Afshar continued to 5 treat Ms. Martinez on a regular basis each and every month after March 2, 2015 6 through the present for severe depression, anxiety and panic attacks. Obviously, 7 there would be no need for the continued treatment if her disabling symptoms had 8 resolved on March 2, 2015. Because Dr. Hayes’s opinion rests entirely on his 9 wrong interpretation of Dr. Afshar’s medical record, it lacks proper foundation and 10 thus carries no weight.

12 133. Dr. Hayes (and Prudential) relied upon a purported April 8, 2015 13 telephone conversation he had with Ms. Martinez’s attending primary care 14 physician, Dr. Patel, which conversation Dr. Hayes mischaracterized. This second 15 inaccurate assumption further undermines Dr. Hayes’s conclusion. Dr. Patel 16 reportedly stated that she agreed with Dr. Hayes that her patient could return to 17 work as of March 2, 2015 because she was no longer experiencing disabling 18 depression, anxiety and panic attack symptoms as of that date, and that Dr. Patel’s 19 return to work date of May 25, 2015 was purely an estimate for which Dr. Patel had 20 no specific reason. Dr. Hayes grossly distorted what was discussed during that 21 telephone conversation. Indeed, Dr. Hayes asked Dr. Patel to sign a letter agreeing 22 that he had accurately characterized their phone conversation, but Dr. Patel refused.
23 There is no evidence in the administrative record that Dr. Patel ever signed that 24 letter or agreed that it accurately reflected their phone conversation.

26 134. Equally important, the claim file confirms the opposite. It shows that 27 Dr. Patel has repeatedly certified Ms. Martinez’s disability from returning to work 28 due to major depression and anxiety well past March 2, 2015 and, most recently, in

1 her letter dated June 20, 2016 where she concluded that her patient is still unable to 2 return to work due to anxiety and depression as of June 2016. Obviously, Dr. Patel
3 never held the opinion that Ms. Martinez could return to work as of March 2015 4 since she has certified her disability continuously from September 2014 through 5 June 2016.

7 135. Even Dr. Hayes's version of the April 8, 2015 phone conversation 8 concedes that he told Dr. Patel that Ms. Martinez's treating psychiatrist, Dr. Afshar, 9 had determined that she was "stable" and thus could return to work as of March 2, 10 2015, and that Dr. Patel said she would defer to the opinions of Ms. Martinez's 11 attending mental health specialists like Dr. Afshar. For the reasons discussed above, 12 that was not Dr. Afshar's opinion. Thus, at worst, the phone conversation, which 13 has never been confirmed by Dr. Patel as accurate, reflects that Dr. Hayes gave Dr.
14 Patel wrong information about Dr. Afshar's opinion and, therefore, anything Dr.
15 Patel said during that conversation did not express her true opinion about her 16 patient's mental health condition. For these reasons, Prudential's reliance on Dr.
17 Hayes's opinion and purported conversation with Dr. Patel was improper.

18 19 136. Additionally, Prudential's reliance on Dr. Chavez's opinion was 20 similarly improper. Dr. Chavez's and Dr. Hayes's respective opinions directly 21 contradict each other. Prudential's own psychiatrists could not even agree. Dr.
22 Hayes concluded Ms. Martinez was unable to work due to mental health restrictions 23 from September 10, 2014 through March 2, 2015, at which time her symptoms 24 stabilized such that she could return to work. But Dr. Chavez concluded Ms.
25 Martinez has always been able to work, including from September 10, 2014 through 26 the present, because her depression and anxiety have always been mild enough such 27 that they do not interfere with her job duties (even though Dr. Chavez was never 28 given her job duties because Prudential itself did not know them). Because

1 Prudential's own psychiatrists contradict each other, Prudential should not have 2 relied upon either opinion, especially because every mental health care professional 3 that has actually examined Ms. Martinez, unlike Drs. Hayes and Chavez, have 4 concluded that she cannot work due to severe anxiety, depression and panic attacks.

6 137. While Dr. Chavez focuses on the lack of confinement to a mental 7 hospital, psychosis and risk of self-harm as evidence supporting his conclusion that 8 Ms. Martinez is not mentally disabled from performing her occupation, as noted 9 below, that is not an actual requirement of the Policy but a nonsensical, arbitrary 10 threshold.

12 138. Dr. Chavez's statement that Ms. Martinez "stopped going to individual 13 therapy from February 2015 until September 2015" is inconsequential and factually 14 inaccurate. Ms. Martinez saw her psychiatrist, Dr. Afshar, each and every month 15 during that entire time frame and has always treated with a psychotherapist on a 16 weekly basis, except for a brief time from March 10, 2015 to September 2, 2015 17 when she was transitioning her care from one therapist to another in part because the 18 former, Dr. Banerjee, was very busy and had to cancel multiple appointments. Dr.
19 Banerjee confirmed that Ms. Martinez remained disabled as of her last visit on 20 March 10.

22 139. Dr. Chavez similarly misinterpreted and relied upon the various 23 "stable" comments in Dr. Afshar's progress notes just like Dr. Hayes, thus 24 undermining one of the key bases for his opinion.

26 140. Dr. Chavez disregarded the patient's subjective complaints that she was 27 unable to function at work due to depression, anxiety and panic attacks, and 28 numerous attending physicians, therapists and a SSA psychiatrist that each certified

1 her mental disability from working. He disagreed with their opinions based upon 2 nothing more than a “cold paper review” of the medical records. While Dr. Chavez 3 offered an opinion regarding Ms. Martinez’s restrictions and limitations that differed 4 from those offered by her treating mental health professionals, he did not speak with 5 them nor her, nor did he independently examine Ms. Martinez. Thus, his conclusion 6 that Ms. Martinez is not disabled is entirely based on the medical records of 7 physicians who do believe she is disabled. Further, while Dr. Chavez’s conclusions 8 differed from that of Ms. Martinez’s treaters, he did not reach out to discuss these 9 differences of opinions. Such a step was very important, especially considering the 10 vast medical evidence supporting Ms. Martinez’s restrictions and limitations. The 11 fact that Dr. Chavez failed to contact Ms. Martinez’s treaters to discuss the apparent 12 discrepancies in the conclusions regarding her restrictions and limitations is 13 evidence that Dr. Chavez (and thus Prudential) did not give their opinions proper 14 weight.

15 16 141. Finally, Prudential’s decision to deny Ms. Martinez’s claim based on 17 the “paper reviews” of Drs. Hayes and Chavez was improper, as such a course of 18 action has been criticized by the Ninth Circuit. Montour v. Hartford Life & 19 Accident, 588 F.3d 623, 630 (9th Cir. 2009) (citing Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v.
20 Glenn, 554 U.S. 105 (2008)). An administrator may not “arbitrarily refuse to credit 21 a claimant’s reliable evidence, including the opinions of treating physicians.” Id.; 22 see also Lin v. Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, 2016 WL 4373859, *6, *9 23 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 16, 2016) (citing Montour at 634) (finding plaintiff disabled under 24 de novo review reasoning, “the Court finds it significant that MetLife terminated 25 Plaintiff’s benefits without actually examining him. The Ninth Circuit has 26 recognized that an insurer’s decision to conduct ‘a ‘pure paper’ review. . . , that is, to 27 hire doctors to review [the claimaint]’s files rather than to conduct an in-person 28 medical evaluation of him’ may raise ‘questions about the thoroughness and accuracy of the benefits determination.’ ”); Michaels v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 305 F. App’x 896, 906-07 (3d Cir. 2009) (questioning administrator’s choice to give determining weight to the conclusions of experts’ paper review reports over the conclusions of claimant’s treating physicians); Moskalski v. Bayer Corp., 2008 WL 2096892, at *9 (W.D. Pa. 2008) (“[T]he selective, self-serving use of medical information is evidence of arbitrary and capricious conduct.”).

142. Indeed, other reported decisions reflect that courts are troubled when, as Prudential did here, an administrator denies a claim by relying on the paper-review reports of consultants that oppose the conclusions of treating physicians.¹⁷

143. No fewer than six treating doctors/therapists and two completely independent SSA doctors, each of whom actually examined Ms. Martinez in-person numerous times during the relevant time period since September 2014, have concluded that she is disabled from performing her occupational duties because of severe depression, anxiety, panic attacks, insomnia, a right knee meniscus tear requiring surgery, shoulder pain and/or low back pain. As ¹⁷ See e.g., Schwarzwaelder v. Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc., 606 F. Supp. 2d 546, 559 (W.D. Pa. 2009); Elms v. Aetna Ins. Co. of Am., 2008 WL 4444269, at *15 (E.D. Pa. 2008) (It is “important to note that no doctor who has actually treated [plaintiff] or examined her in person, as opposed to performing a ‘file review’ has found her to be capable . . . of performing work-related tasks.”); Winkler v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 170 F. App’x 167 (2d Cir. 2006) (vacating denial as arbitrary where it was based “entirely on the opinions of three independent consultants who never personally examined [plaintiff], while discounting the opinions” of the treating physicians); Glenn v. MetLife, 461 F.3d 660, 671 (6th Cir. 2006), aff’d by Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., supra, 554 U.S. 105 (finding it “perplexing” that the plan administrator disregarded the opinion of the “only physician to have personally treated or observed” the claimant); Kinser v. Plans Admin. Comm. of Citigroup, Inc., 488 F. Supp. 2d 1369, 1382-383 (M.D. Ga. 2007) (concluding it was unreasonable for the plan administrator to ignore the treating physician’s “clearly stated and supported opinion” and rely instead on “a cold record file-review by a non-examining” consultant); Schramm v. CNA Fin. Corp. Insured Grp. Ben. Program, 718 F. Supp. 2d 1151, 1164 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (“The Court likewise gives little weight to the opinions of Drs. Marion and Fuchs. Although they reviewed plaintiff’s medical records, they did not examine her in person.”).

alleged above, these include:

- Dr. Patel (PCP board-certified in internal medicine – treated her for twenty-five years including numerous times since September 2014);
- Dr. Afshar (board-certified psychiatrist – treated her twenty times from 2014 to 2016);
- Ms. Isom (licensed therapist – treated her weekly for five months during relevant time period);
- Dr. Banerjee (psychologist – treated her five times during relevant period);
- Mr. Thompson (licensed therapist – treated her twenty-nine times during relevant period);
- Dr. Thomas (chiropractor – treated her since 2003 including numerous times since September 2014);
- Dr. Nadella (board-certified psychiatrist acting on the SSA’s behalf); and
- Dr. Sedgh (board-certified internist acting on the SSA’s behalf).

144. The opinions of these health care professionals, having examined the patient for years and having spoken with her in detail, carry far more weight than Prudential’s “paper reviewers.” See Shannon Williams v. United Omaha, 2013 WL 5519525, at *12 (N. D. Ala., Sept. 30, 2013) citing Black & Decker v. Nord, 538 U.S. 822, 832 (2003) (while a court is not required to give deference to the opinion of a treating physician, it is required to evaluate the weight of each doctor’s opinion based on the extent of the patient treatment history). That court explained why the opinions of a treating physician is usually more credible:

[D]irect contact with the patient over a period of time would provide a more thorough opportunity to assess her credibility regarding level of pain and the true pattern of her abilities. Therefore, in the instant case, the court will focus heavily on the opinions and treatment records of

Williams' treating physicians

145. As noted, Prudential's peer reviewers did not examine Ms. Martinez, though Prudential's Policy permitted it and her counsel even offered her up to Prudential for an IME. That raises additional questions about the credibility of their opinions and the accuracy of Prudential's benefits denial. See Shaw v. AT&T, 795 F.3d 538, 550 (6th Cir. 2015) ("the failure to conduct a physical examination, where the Plan document gave the plan administrator the right to do so, 'raise[s] questions about the thoroughness and accuracy of the benefits determination.' "); McKenna v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 620 F. App'x 445, 451–52 (6th Cir. 2015) (same rule applies for de novo review).

146. In sum, Prudential's claim decision relies on the opinions of two paid psychiatrists who conducted insufficient "paper reviews," failed to examine or even speak with Ms. Martinez, failed to give proper weight to the conclusions of her treating physicians, and which paper review opinions directly contradict each other and are not well reasoned. Prudential's "paper reviews" were flawed and contained conclusions not supported by Ms. Martinez's medical records. Accordingly, Prudential's benefit determination was incorrect and not the result of a proper, unbiased investigation. This is especially true in light of the fact that numerous attending physicians examined Ms. Martinez and concluded she is disabled. They were far better suited to render credible opinions than Prudential's "paper reviewers," having treated the patient for years.

147. Prudential's benefits decision is wrong for another reason. It improperly required Ms. Martinez to meet a heightened standard of "disability" not contained in the group policy or other Plan documents. It essentially attempted to rewrite the Policy to require a threshold level of evidence not in its express

1 provisions. For example, Prudential’s January 6, 2016 and November 14, 2016 2 appeal denials (and Dr. Chavez’s corresponding peer review reports upon which 3 Prudential relied) each reason that because Ms. Martinez “was never hospitalized 4 nor referred to a higher level of care such as a psychiatric intensive outpatient 5 program,” she was not disabled from performing her job duties (despite numerous 6 mental health care professionals diagnosing her with debilitating depression, anxiety 7 and panic attacks that prevented her from performing her job duties). Prudential and 8 its psychiatrist consultant also reasoned that, absent evidence of “psychosis,” “self-9 harm” and “severe” depression or mental illness, Ms. Martinez could not have a 10 disabling mental illness that prevented her from working.

12 148. The Policy does not require any of that. The Policy definition of 13 “disability” only requires that a claimant be “unable to perform the material and 14 substantial duties of [her] regular occupation due to [her] sickness” and that Ms.
15 Martinez is “under the regular care of a doctor.” The definition that governs Ms.
16 Martinez’s claim provides that as long as her documented medical conditions 17 prevent her from performing the essential duties of her regular occupation and she is 18 under the care of a doctor, she is entitled to disability benefits. There is no 19 requirement that the medical evidence she offers in support of her claim establish 20 confinement to a hospital or intensive outpatient psychiatric care, nor psychosis, 21 self-harm or “severe” depression.

23 149. In fact, in the scenario of hospital confinement the Policy explicitly 24 requires Prudential to pay LTD benefits beyond the normal 24-month limit for 25 mental illness disability claims. It states,

27 Disabilities which, as determined by Prudential, are due in whole or 28 part to mental illness have a limited pay period during your lifetime.

1 The limited pay period for mental illness is 24 months during your 2 lifetime. Prudential will continue to send you payments for disabilities 3 due in whole or part to mental illness beyond the 24 month period if 4 you meet one or both of these conditions: 1. If you are confined to a 5 hospital or institution at the end of the 24 month period, Prudential 6 will continue to send you payments during your confinement. If you 7 are still disabled when you are discharged, Prudential will send you 8 payments for a recovery period of up to 90 days. (Emphasis in 9 original).

 11 The Policy thus contemplates Prudential paying disability benefits for the first 24 12 months of a mental illness claim where the claimant is not confined to a mental 13 hospital but is unable to perform the duties of her regular occupation, just as in Ms.
 14 Martinez's case. Prudential and its peer reviewer clearly required additional 15 evidence, confinement to a mental hospital, not required by the Policy when denying 16 Ms. Martinez's claim.

 18 150. Similarly, the Policy expressly covers disabilities caused by a "mental 19 illness," which the Policy broadly defines as any "psychiatric or psychological 20 condition . . . includ[ing] but . . . not limited to . . . depression . . . anxiety . . . or 21 other conditions." The Policy does not limit a covered mental illness to "severe" 22 depression or "severe" mental illness, nor does it require evidence of psychosis,¹⁸ 23 self-harm or confinement in a mental hospital, contrary to what Prudential and its

 25 ¹⁸ Despite that, Ms. Martinez's treating therapist, Mr. Thompson, reported that she 26 did have episodes of psychosis. He reiterated that he had diagnosed her with 27 "recurring Major Depression that at times has had psychotic features" such as 28 feeling like an intruder could possibly assault her. He documented in his progress notes: patient has "paranoia while waiting out back at home. She fears attack when in shower." Prudential, in its November 2016 appeal denial, disingenuously attempts to downplay Mr. Thompson's opinion by concluding without any support that Ms. Martinez's behavior, while "suspicious" and expected by someone with anxiety, is not "psychotic."

3 151. Prudential's heightened requirement of disability is evidence that it did 4 not provide Ms. Martinez with a full and fair review of her claim for benefits.
5 Numerous courts have ruled that requiring the claimant to meet a standard of 6 evidence not set forth in the policy is an abuse of whatever discretion is afforded the 7 ERISA administrator and requires that the claim decision be overturned. For 8 example, in Saffle v. Sierra Pacific Power Co., 85 F.3d 455, 459-60 (9th Cir. 1996), 9 the Ninth Circuit ruled that requiring a claimant to meet a standard that is not 10 present in the Plan documents "effectively imposes a new requirement for 11 coverage," but because "an administrator lacks discretion to rewrite the Plan," to do 12 so is an abuse of discretion. In Hagerty v. American Airlines Long Term Disability 13 Plan, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91995 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 3, 2010), the court noted that 14 "[n]umerous courts found it [in] error to require objective medical evidence of 15 complaints that are inherently subjective in nature." Id. at *6 (citing Montour v.
16 Hartford Life & Acc. Ins. Co., 588 F.3d 623, 635 (9th Cir. 2009)). The Hagerty court 17 ruled that "requiring objective medical evidence of fatigue, when The Plan 18 documents do not expressly require such proof, is a factor suggesting The Plan 19 abused its discretion." Id. at *6. Similarly, here, Prudential requiring evidence of 20 hospital confinement, psychosis, self-harm and "severe" mental illness or depression 21 to establish mental disability suggests that it abused its discretion and failed to fairly 22 review Ms. Martinez's claim.

24 152. Prudential's decision to ignore Ms. Martinez's diagnosed symptoms 25 and subjective complaints of disabling depression, anxiety, panic attacks and 26 insomnia, and demand that she provide evidence that she was confined to a mental 27 hospital (had psychosis, "severe" depression and was at risk of self-harm) in support 28 of her disability claim represents an improper attempt to rewrite the Policy in

1 Prudential's favor. Enforcing this unwarranted requirement strongly evidences that 2 Prudential did not provide Ms. Martinez with a full and fair review of, and 3 erroneously denied, her claim for benefits.

5 153. Another obvious problem in Prudential's benefits decision, both its 6 initial denial and denials on appeal, is that it failed to account for a contrary decision 7 from an independent entity finding Ms. Martinez disabled from working, her 8 employer Chase Bank. That entity had a strong financial incentive to conclude Ms.
9 Martinez was not disabled (but still found she was). Chase Bank handled Ms.
10 Martinez's STD claim. Chase was the STD claim administrator and also 11 responsible to self-fund any STD benefits it awarded its employees. Despite its 12 financial incentive to conclude that Ms. Martinez was able to perform her material 13 job duties, Chase Bank concluded the opposite, that Ms. Martinez was disabled from 14 performing her own regular occupation at the bank due to her mental health issues.
15 Chase paid her STD benefits for the full period allowed for by the STD plan. Chase 16 then terminated Ms. Martinez's employment, effective February 9, 2016, because it 17 still felt as of that time that she was incapable of performing her job duties. It would 18 know since it witnessed her functional abilities each day leading up to her disability 19 at work.

21 154. Despite Prudential's knowledge that Ms. Martinez was found to be 22 disabled by her employer, Chase Bank, and was therefore receiving disability 23 benefits for depression and anxiety, it made no attempt whatsoever to explain why 24 its denial decision differed. Courts have repeatedly ruled that a claim administrator 25 must acknowledge and address contrary disability claim decisions reached by other 26 entities. See generally, Montour, supra, 588 F.3d 623. "While ERISA plan 27 administrators are not bound by the SSA's determination, complete disregard for a 28 contrary conclusion without so much as an explanation raises questions about 1 whether an adverse benefits determination was the product of a principled and 2 deliberative reasoning process.” Id. at 635 (internal quotations omitted). Indeed, 3 the Ninth Circuit warned that “not distinguishing the SSA’s contrary conclusion 4 may indicate a failure to consider relevant evidence.” The administrative record 5 contains information regarding the determination by Chase Bank that Ms. Martinez 6 was disabled, however, Prudential failed to acknowledge, consider and distinguish 7 the finding in any of its denial letters. Ultimately, Prudential’s failure to address 8 Ms. Martinez’s STD benefits award in its denial letters, despite clear knowledge of 9 her award, suggests that it did not fully consider all the evidence supporting Ms.

10 Martinez’s disability. The award and later termination strongly evidences that she 11 was and is disabled, contrary to what Prudential has contended, because the standard 12 to receive STD benefits is similar to Prudential’s “regular occupation policy.”
13 Because Prudential persisted in its position that Ms. Martinez is not disabled without 14 explaining the employer’s contrary decision, even after Plaintiff’s counsel brought 15 this to Prudential’s attention during the appeal process, it raises questions about 16 whether Prudential decided Ms. Martinez’s claim fairly and correctly. See Montour, 17 supra, 588 F.3d at 635.

18 19 155. Chase Bank reached its decision to award benefits based in part on the 20 findings of a clinical psychologist it retained to review Ms. Martinez’s mental 21 disability claim, Dr. Mosbach. Dr. Mosbach concluded that Ms. Martinez was 22 disabled from performing her own occupation from a mental health standpoint from 23 September 10, 2014 onwards due to anxiety, panic attacks and depression that 24 interfered with her ability to focus, “maintain[] pace at work,” and concentrate on 25 and complete her work tasks as Chase’s Business Relationship Manager. Since Dr.
26 Mosbach was retained by Chase Bank (the employer and entity responsible to pay 27 Ms. Martinez’s STD claim), he obviously had every incentive to find that Ms.
28 Martinez could work and was not mentally disabled from performing her

1 occupational duties. But Dr. Mosbach concluded she was mentally disabled from 2 working, which is strong evidence that Prudential's claim denial was in error.
3 Again, Prudential made no attempt to distinguish Dr. Mosbach's findings.

5 156. Similarly, the SSA approved Ms. Martinez's claim for SSDI benefits.
6 The SSA's retroactive award of disability benefits establishes yet another 7 independent entity considers Ms. Martinez disabled from September 10, 2014 8 through the present, further undermining Prudential's benefit decision.

10 157. Based upon the independent psychiatric and medical reports of Drs.
11 Nadella and Sedgh, the SSA awarded Ms. Martinez SSDI benefits and "found that 12 [Ms. Martinez] became disabled under our rules on September 10, 2014." Given 13 that the SSA's rules for deciding whether a person is disabled are far more stringent 14 than those in Prudential's group insurance Policy issued to Chase, which Policy 15 requires only that Ms. Martinez be "unable to perform the material and substantial 16 duties of [her] regular occupation," this is strong evidence that Prudential made the 17 wrong benefits decision by denying Ms. Martinez's disability claim. See Rowell v.
18 Aviza Tech. Health & Welfare Plan, No. C 10-5656 PSG, 2012 WL 1672497, at *17 19 (N.D. Cal. May 14, 2012) ("Here, Defendants fail to address how Rowell's ongoing 20 eligibility for [Social Security disability] benefits under the stringent, 'substantial 21 gainful activity' standard of the Social Security Act does not support a finding of 22 disability under the substantially less stringent 'your occupation' standard for LTD 23 benefits under the Plan."); Shaw v. Life Ins. Co. of N. Am., 144 F. Supp. 3d 1114, 24 1135 (C.D. Cal. 2015) ("The Ninth Circuit has warned that 'in some cases, such as 25 this one, the SSA deploys a more stringent standard for determining disability than 26 does the governing ERISA plan.' Specifically, to receive Social Security disability 27 benefits, Shaw had to show that she was 'unab[le] to engage in any substantial 28 gainful activity . . . ' Under the Plan, however, Shaw had merely to show that she

1 was unable to perform the material duties of her regular occupation.” (citations 2 omitted)); 423 U.S.C. § 423(d)(1)(A) (standard for SSDI disability benefits) (“The 3 term “disability” means -- (A) inability to engage in any substantial gainful activity 4 by reason of any medically determinable physical or mental impairment which can 5 be expected to result in death or which has lasted or can be expected to last for a 6 continuous period of not less than 12 months[.]”); 423 U.S.C. § 423(d)(2)(A) (“An 7 individual shall be determined to be under a disability only if his physical or mental 8 impairment or impairments are of such severity that he is not only unable to do his 9 previous work but cannot, considering his age, education, and work experience, 10 engage in any other kind of substantial gainful work which exists in the national 11 economy . . .”).

 13 158. An independent government entity, the SSA, has concluded that Ms.
 14 Martinez is currently disabled from performing any type of gainful work including 15 her own and has been since September 10, 2014, which is strong evidence that Ms.
 16 Martinez cannot perform the material duties of her own regular occupation, contrary 17 to what Prudential contends. See Rouleau v. Liberty Life Assurance Co. of Boston, 18 2017 WL 359466, at *7 (W.D. Mich. Jan. 25, 2017) (“In its de novo review, the 19 Court weighs the SSA determination heavily.”).

 21 159. In an attempt to comply with Montour, supra, 588 F.3d at 635 (only 22 because Plaintiff’s counsel discussed this in the second appeal), Prudential briefly 23 explained in its final denial why its benefits decision differed from that of the SSA.
 24 Prudential’s explanation lacked any detail, meaningful analysis or logic. It 25 summarily dismissed the SSA’s finding of mental disability based on the terse, 26 unsupported, conclusory opinion of Prudential’s own biased psychiatrist consultant, 27 Dr. Chavez, that “the restrictions and limitations documented by the [SSA’s] 28 independent medical examiner [Dr. Nadella] are not medically necessary.” In other

1 words, Prudential concluded with little analysis that Dr. Chavez’s opinion (which 2 already contradicted the opinion of Prudential’s other psychiatrist consultant, Dr.
3 Hayes) is better than Dr. Nadella’s opinion and so the SSA’s finding of disability 4 was erroneous.

6 160. Prudential’s superficial attempt to distinguish the SSA’s finding is 7 unpersuasive. Dr. Chavez’s opinion is not credible, and certainly less credible than 8 Dr. Nadella’s, for all the reasons already discussed above, including because Dr.
9 Chavez performed only a cursory paper review of Ms. Martinez’s medical records, 10 unlike Dr. Nadella who conducted an in-person exam including numerous objective 11 psychological tests. Second, Dr. Nadella’s opinion carries more weight because she 12 is an independent psychiatrist with allegiance to the SSA, not to Ms. Martinez or 13 Prudential. Unlike Dr. Chavez, she has no inherent bias toward any of the parties to 14 this litigation. Third, Dr. Chavez disagreed with Dr. Nadella’s work restrictions 15 based on the incorrect assumption that Dr. Nadella did not find “evidence of a major 16 depressive disorder.” To the contrary, after an in-person psychiatric mental status 17 exam, evaluation, observation and objective tests, Dr. Nadella diagnosed Ms.
18 Martinez with “major depression,” panic disorder,” “adjustment disorder with 19 anxiety and depression,” and a GAF score of 50 (indicating Ms. Martinez is 20 clinically depressed to the point she has “serious impairment in . . . occupational . . .
21 functioning [and is] unable to keep a job.”)

23 161. Further, the cursory explanation Prudential and Dr. Chavez offered to 24 reject the SSA and Dr. Nadella’s disability finding is based on reasons that violate 25 the Plan’s terms. They required Ms. Martinez to meet a heightened standard for 26 “disability” not required by the Plan and rejected Dr. Nadella’s opinion for the same 27 reason. They reasoned Ms. Martinez could not be mentally disabled from 28 performing her job duties because Dr. Nadella failed to find evidence of “self-

1 harm,” confinement to a mental hospital, “severe mental illness,” or “psychosis.”
 2 As alleged above, that flawed logic is not permissible under the Plan documents, 3 and it is nonsensical. A person need not be confined to a mental hospital, for 4 example, before their debilitating depression, anxiety or panic attacks can interfere 5 with their ability to properly perform their job duties. That is not the Plan’s standard 6 for disability.

 8 162. Prudential’s benefits decision is flawed for yet another reason.
 9 Prudential’s own board-certified orthopedic surgeon consultant for both appeal 10 reviews, Dr. Trotter, concluded that Ms. Martinez had medical restrictions and 11 limitations that would prevent her from working. He concluded that due to the 12 cartilage damage in her right knee, which would (and did) require surgery, she could 13 not walk/stand for more than forty-five minutes at a time or for more than two hours 14 total in an eight-hour workday, from February 3, 2015 through the present. While 15 Prudential does not dispute Dr. Trotter’s findings, it contends they are irrelevant 16 because of its other findings that Ms. Martinez had no mental restrictions and 17 limitations from September 2014 through February 2015 (based on Dr. Chavez’s 18 findings during its appeal reviews) and was not “actively employed” with Chase 19 Bank at that time (and thus lost coverage under the Policy’s terms by the time her 20 admitted knee/physical disability commenced). But, as already established above, 21 Ms. Martinez was mentally disabled from September 2014 through the present. She 22 thus did not lose coverage under the Policy and, therefore, Dr. Trotter’s findings 23 provide additional evidence that Ms. Martinez was disabled from performing the 24 material duties of her regular occupation. Her occupation required her to walk/stand 25 for long periods of time, usually about 85% of her workday, i.e. 6.8 hours of an 26 eight-hour workday.¹⁹ Prudential’s own peer review physician concluded Ms.

27
 28 ¹⁹ Ms. Martinez consistently worked 40-60 hours per week which would require even more walking/standing than 6.8 hours per day.

1 Martinez could not do that, that she could walk/stand at most two hours total in an 2 eight-hour work day. Thus, Dr. Trotter's findings alone conclusively prove Ms.
3 Martinez could not perform the material duties of her regular occupation as a 4 Business Relationship Manager of a large bank from February 2015 onwards.

6 163. The opinions of Prudential's own medical consultants conclusively 7 establish that Ms. Martinez was continuously disabled during the entire Elimination 8 Period, September 10, 2014 through March 11, 2015 and beyond, and thus entitled 9 to disability benefits. The first psychiatrist consultant Prudential employed to 10 investigate the claim in early 2015, Dr. Hayes, concluded that Ms. Martinez was 11 disabled for psychiatric reasons from September 10, 2014 through March 2, 2015.
12 And, Dr. Trotter concluded, as just noted, that Ms. Martinez was disabled due to 13 knee and orthopedic problems from February 3, 2015 onward, at least through 14 November 2016. While Prudential hired an additional psychiatrist expert months 15 later (Dr. Chavez) and "cherry-picked" his opinion over Dr. Hayes's to support its 16 disingenuous benefits decision, it cannot escape the fact that its own medical 17 consultants, Drs. Hayes and Trotter, unequivocally establish that Ms. Martinez was 18 disabled for the entire Elimination Period and beyond and, thus, entitled to benefits.
19 That alone is enough to meet Ms. Martinez's burden to prove on a de novo review 20 that it is more probable than not that she was disabled during the Elimination Period 21 and thereafter.

23 164. Over the nearly two-year period that it investigated this matter, 24 Prudential's position shifted like the wind whenever it was confronted with new 25 facts that did not support its pre-contrived decision to deny Ms. Martinez's claim 26 irrespective of its merits. The glaring problem for Prudential is, along the way, its 27 own experts reached opinions that it now must live with, and those opinions 28 collectively establish disability for the entire 182-day Elimination Period and beyond, first a mental disability and then an orthopedic one.

165. Prudential's benefits decision is further woefully deficient because it failed to evaluate Ms. Martinez's occupational duties. Under the Policy, Ms. Martinez is considered "disabled" (and thus entitled to benefits) if she is unable to perform the material and substantial duties of her regular occupation. An insured's occupational duties are thus critical to an insurer's disability analysis. But Prudential did not even know Ms. Martinez's job duties the first two times it denied her claim. As of that time, nowhere in Prudential's claim file as it then existed were Ms. Martinez's job duties or the duties of a Business Relationship Manager for a large, national bank documented, analyzed or considered. Prudential did not obtain a job description from Ms. Martinez, her employer Chase Bank or anyone else. It did not use a vocational consultant to determine her job duties (or at all). Consequently, it did not discuss Ms. Martinez's job duties or the duties of her regular occupation in its first two denial letters.²⁰ These facts alone are fatal to Prudential's position. It was not feasible for Prudential to reasonably conclude that Ms. Martinez is "not disabled" from performing the duties of her regular occupation because it did not even know what those occupational duties included when it denied her claim or first appeal.

166. The proper standard of review is de novo. Any grant of discretionary authority contained in the Plan is void in light of California Insurance Code section 10110.6, which provides, in relevant part:

²⁰ Prudential devoted just one sentence to Ms. Martinez's job duties in its final, November 2016 denial of her second appeal prepared by her lawyers, only because her lawyers forced Prudential to confront the obvious flaw in its logic. Plaintiff's lawyers sent Prudential Chase Bank's detailed job description for her position and demanded that it consider her occupational duties. In response, Prudential did not discuss any of the cognitive aspects of her job, only the physical, making its purported one-sentence occupational "analysis" superficial and flawed.

(a) If a policy, contract, certificate, or agreement offered, issued, delivered, or renewed, whether or not in California, that provides or funds life insurance or disability insurance coverage for any California resident contains a provision that reserves discretionary authority to the insurer, or an agent of the insurer, to determine eligibility for benefits or coverage, to interpret the terms of the policy, contract, certificate, or agreement, or to provide standards of interpretation or review that are inconsistent with the laws of this state, that provision is void and unenforceable.

(b) For purposes of this section, “renewed” means continued in force on or after the policy’s anniversary date.

(c) For purposes of this section, the term “discretionary authority” means a policy provision that has the effect of conferring discretion on an insurer or other claim administrator to determine entitlement to benefits or interpret policy language that, in turn, could lead to a deferential standard of review by any reviewing court.

(g) This section is self-executing. If a life insurance or disability insurance policy, contract, certificate, or agreement contains a provision rendered void and unenforceable by this section, the parties to the policy, contract, certificate, or agreement and the courts shall treat that provision as void and unenforceable.

167. This section, by its own terms, applies to any Policy, certificate, contract or agreement that provides “disability insurance coverage” to “any California resident” regardless of where it was offered, issued, delivered, or renewed. Here, no party disputes that Plaintiff is a California resident. As such, this section applies to the group policy, certificate and Plan at issue so long as they were offered, issued, delivered, or renewed after the effective date of the statute, which is January 1, 2012, but before Plaintiff’s claim accrued. See Gonda v. The Permanente Med. Grp., Inc., 2014 WL 186354, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 16, 2014). No party disputes that Plaintiff’s claim accrued on April 10, 2015, which is the date on which her claim was first denied. See Grosz–Salomon v. Paul Revere Life Ins., 237 F.3d 1154 (9th Cir. 2001) (holding that an ERISA cause of action based on a denial of ERISA benefits accrues at the time benefits are denied).

168. Thus, the only issue is whether the Policy was offered, issued, delivered, or renewed on or after January 1, 2012, but before April 10, 2015. For the purposes of section 10110.6, a policy automatically renews every year on the policy's anniversary date. See Cal. Ins. Code § 10110.6(b) (providing that "renewed" means "continued in force on or after the policy's anniversary date"). Plaintiff alleges on information and belief that the group Policy became effective on or before January 1, 2011 and that the Policy anniversary is annually on January 1. Indeed, the group certificate of insurance in the administrative record that is part of the Plan and group Policy has a January 1, 2011 effective date. The Policy, Plan and certificate has renewed, on information and belief, each year on January 1, 2012, January 1, 2013, January 1, 2014, January 1, 2015 and continuing. This means that the policy's renewal date falls within the relevant time period, as the policy continued in force through January 1, 2012. See Gonda, supra at 1093-94; Polnicky v. Liberty Life Assur. Co. Of Boston, 999 F. Supp. 2d 1144, 1148 (N.D. Cal. 2013) (applying de novo standard of review to ERISA claim for denial of benefits because "[t]he Policy was continued in force after its January 1, 2012 anniversary date, [so] any provision in the Policy attempting to confer discretionary authority to Liberty Life was rendered void and unenforceable"). As such, any grants of discretion that can be deemed to be a part of the policy or Plan are void and unenforceable, and thus, the denial of benefits at issue must be reviewed de novo.

169. In a de novo review, "the burden of proof is placed on the claimant" to establish entitlement to plan benefits. Muniz v. Amec Const. Mgmt., Inc., 623 F.3d 1290, 1294 (9th Cir. 2010). "When conducting a de novo review of the record, the court does not give deference to the claim administrator's decision, but rather determines in the first instance if the claimant has adequately established that he or she [qualified for benefits] under the terms of the plan." Id. at 1295-96. The trial court performs an "independent and thorough inspection" of the plan administrator's decision in order to determine if the plan administrator correctly or incorrectly

1 denied benefits. Silver v. Executive Car Leasing Long-Term Disability Plan, 466 2 F.3d 727, 733 (9th Cir. 2006). De novo review permits the trial court to “evaluate 3 the persuasiveness of conflicting testimony and decide which is more likely true.”
4 Kearney v. Standard Ins. Co., 175 F.3d 1084, 1095 (9th Cir.1999).

6 170. Regardless of the standard of review this Court applies, Prudential 7 reached an incorrect decision given the overwhelming medical records and other 8 evidence presented during the claim establishing Plaintiff was and is disabled within 9 the meaning of the Plan. Prudential’s denial letters collectively failed to credit the 10 overwhelming medical evidence supporting Plaintiff’s on-going claim for LTD 11 benefits; improperly relied on poorly reasoned “paper reviews” of biased 12 psychiatrists (whose opinions even directly contradicted each other) over the more 13 credible opinions of Ms. Martinez’s attending physicians; improperly required Ms.
14 Martinez to meet a heightened standard for disability not contained in the Plan such 15 as “hospitalization” for a mental illness; and failed to determine Ms. Martinez’s 16 occupational duties. Additionally, Prudential failed to meaningfully distinguish the 17 decisions by multiple independent entities with adverse interests to Ms. Martinez, 18 such as her employer and the SSA, that found her disabled and entitled to disability 19 benefits (based on in-person exams by independent physicians having no affiliation 20 to her). Accordingly, Prudential conducted a biased claims investigation consistent 21 with its conflict of interest that failed to provide Plaintiff with a full and fair review 22 of her claim, which is a violation of ERISA, and led to an incorrect benefits 23 decision.

25 171. Plaintiff exhausted her administrative remedies under the Plan and has 26 the right to bring a legal action for benefits under ERISA section 502(a).
27 Prudential’s November 14, 2016 denial letter stated as much, specifically, “you may 28 file a lawsuit under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA).”

1 172. Plaintiff is now and at all relevant times remained “disabled” as defined 2 in the Plan, and has now and at all relevant times convincingly demonstrated her 3 total disability through medical records and other documents, information and 4 correspondence.

6 FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION

7 To Recover Benefits, Attorneys’ Fees, Pre-Judgment and Post-Judgment Interest 8 under ERISA Plan – 29 U.S.C. sections 1132(a)(1)(B), (g)(1) 9 (Plaintiff against Prudential and Does 1 through 10) 10

11 173. Plaintiff incorporates the previous paragraphs as though fully set forth 12 herein.

14 174. ERISA section 502(a)(1)(B), 29 U.S.C. section 1132(a)(1)(B), permits 15 a plan participant to bring a civil action to recover benefits due to her under the 16 terms of a plan, to enforce her rights under the terms of a plan, and/or to clarify her 17 rights to future benefits under the terms of a plan.
18

19 175. At all relevant times, Plaintiff has been entitled to LTD benefits under 20 the Plan. By denying Plaintiff’s claim for LTD benefits under the Plan, and by 21 related acts and omissions, Prudential violated, and continues to violate, the terms of 22 the Plan and Plaintiff’s rights thereunder.
23

24 176. Prudential has failed to follow even the most rudimentary claims 25 processing requirements of ERISA and the Department of Labor Regulations and 26 has failed to conduct a “full and fair review” of the claim denial, as required by 29 27 U.S.C. section 1133(2). Thus, even if the Plan vests discretion in Prudential to 28 make benefit determinations, no deference is warranted with regard to Prudential’s

1 handling of this claim. See Booton v. Lockheed Medical Benefit Plan, 110 F.3d 2 1461, 1465 (9th Cir. 1997); Jebian v. Hewlett-Packard Company Employee Benefits 3 Organization Income Protection Plan, 349 F.3d 1098, 1105 (9th Cir. 2003) (“When 4 decisions are not in compliance with regulatory and plan procedures, deference may 5 not be warranted.”).

 7 177. A “prudent person” standard is imposed on ERISA fiduciaries. See 29 8 U.S.C. §1104(a)(1)(b). A “fiduciary” is also under a duty of loyalty and care to the 9 beneficiaries of the Plan. See 29 U.S.C. section 1104(a)(1). Under ERISA: (1) a 10 fiduciary must discharge its duties solely in the interest of plan participants and 11 beneficiaries and for the exclusive purpose of providing plan benefits to them; (2) a 12 fiduciary must act with care, skill, prudence and diligence; and (3) a fiduciary may 13 not act in any capacity involving the Plan, on behalf of a party whose interests are 14 adverse to the interests of the Plan, its participants, or its beneficiaries. Prudential’s 15 handling of Plaintiff’s disability benefit claim falls far short of these standards.

 17 178. For all the reasons set forth above, the decision to deny disability 18 insurance benefits was arbitrary, capricious, wrongful, incorrect, unreasonable, 19 irrational, contrary to the evidence, contrary to the terms of the Plan and contrary to 20 law. Prudential abused its discretion in deciding to deny this claim as the evidence 21 shows its denial decision was not only incorrect but, arbitrary and capricious.
 22 Further, Prudential’s denial decision and actions heighten the level of skepticism 23 with which a court views a conflicted administrator’s decision under Abatie v. Alta
 24 Health & Life Insurance Co., 458 F.3d 955 (9th Cir. 2006) and Metropolitan Life
 25 Insurance Co. v. Glenn, 544 U.S. 105 (2008). Prudential’s denial of Plaintiff’s 26 claim constitutes an abuse of discretion.

27 28 179. Alternatively, Plaintiff has met the burden under a de novo standard of 1 review establishing she is disabled due to her symptoms alleged above, including 2 without limit severe depression, anxiety, panic attacks, difficulty concentrating, 3 difficulty focusing, right knee and foot pain, shoulder pain and low back pain, most 4 of which have plagued her from September 2014 to present and continuing.

5 Prudential's denial of Plaintiff's claim was incorrect and improper based upon all 6 the evidence discussed herein.

8 180. As a direct and proximate result of Prudential's denial of disability 9 benefits, Plaintiff has been deprived of LTD benefits from and after March 2015.

11 181. As a direct and proximate result of the denial of her claim for LTD 12 benefits, Plaintiff has been required to incur attorneys' fees to pursue this action, 13 and is entitled to reimbursement of these fees pursuant to 29 U.S.C. section 14 1132(g)(1).

16 182. A controversy now exists between the parties as to whether Plaintiff is 17 disabled as defined in the Plan and therefore entitled to LTD benefits. Plaintiff 18 seeks the declaration of this Court that she meets the Plan definition of disability, 19 and is entitled to benefits under the Plan. In the alternative, Plaintiff seeks a remand 20 to the claims administrator for a determination of Plaintiff's claim consistent with 21 the terms of the Plan.

23 183. Plaintiff alleges all the same conduct against Does 1 through 10 as she 24 does against Prudential in this First Cause of Action and in this Complaint.

26 PRAYER FOR RELIEF

27 28 WHEREFORE, Plaintiff prays that this Court grant the following relief

1 against all Defendants:

- 3 1. For all Plan benefits due and owing Plaintiff, including LTD benefits;
- 4 2. For costs and reasonable attorneys' fees pursuant to 29 U.S.C. section
- 5 1132(g);
- 6 3. For pre-judgment and post-judgment interest on the principal sum,
- 7 accruing from the date the obligations were incurred. See Blankenship
- 8 v. Liberty Life Assurance Co. of Boston, 486 F.3d 620, 627 (9th Cir.
- 9 2007) ("A district court may award prejudgment interest on an award of
- 10 ERISA benefits at its discretion."); Drennan v. General Motors Corp.,
- 11 977 F.2d 246, 253 (6th Cir. 1992). Specifically, Plaintiff seeks interest
- 12 at the rate of 10% per annum, pursuant to California Insurance Code
- 13 section 10111.2; and
- 14 4. For such other and further relief as this Court deems just and proper.
